It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE GREAT

Northwestern Soldiers' Fair.

The North-Western Soldiers' Fair, held in Chicago the last week of October and the first week of November, engrossed the interest and sympathy of the North-Western States in an entirely unprecedented manner. For weeks it was the cynosure of all eyes, the theme of all tongues--attracting even the attention of the whole loyal North, while disloyalists gave unmistakable testimony to the good service it was rendering the dear cause of the country, by assaulting both it and its managers in the most frantic manner. All true hearts were earnestly enlisted in the noble enterprise from its inception to its completion--the press lent it generous and persistent aid; patriotic men and women gave to it energetic and varied effort, while a loyal and grateful people lavished upon it unstinted liberality.

Such a furore of benevolence had never been known! Men, women and children, corporations and business firms, religious societies and political organizations all vied with one another enthusiastically, as to who should do the most for the great Fair, whose proceeds were to be devoted to the sick and wounded of the South-Western hospitals. As the Hebrews, in olden time, brought their free-will offerings to the altar of the Lord, so did the people of the North-West, grateful to their brave defenders, lay upon the altar of the country whatever they had of goods or treasure. The rich gave of their abundance, and the poor withheld not from giving, because of their poverty.

A history of this magnificent outburst of patriotism and generosity has been called for, which shall embody a narration of its rise and progress; the method with which it was conducted; a list of its donors with their myriad benefactions, and the result of the Fair, with such other matters of interest as inseparably cluster about so grand an occasion. To satisfy this demand, this history has been written. The facts connected with the Fair are here given; but the spontaneous enthusiasm, the infinite tenderness, the electric generosity, the moral earnestness, the contagious patriotism that transfused and electrified and glorified the occasion, can no more be recorded than can the shifting hues and lights of the Aurora Borealis.

As it greatly outgrew the original calculations of those who projected it, and who, until its close, only intended to publish a catalogue of the donations with the names of the donors attached, this pamphlet has been prepared under the difficulty of recalling events which should have been daguerreotyped at the time, and of crystallizing into a shape for publication the deeds of weeks, when the very atmosphere seemed magnetized with grand purposes and enthusiastic benevolence. It has been yet more difficult to obtain an accurate list of the donations to the Fair, with the source from whence they were received, scattered as they are over so large a territory, and imperfectly collected as they were, while the Fair was in progress. To this circumstance, and to the fact that the sales of the mechanical and produce department of the Fair are hardly yet ended, is due the delay of this pamphlet. Such as it is, it is presented to the public, with the wish that it may assist to perpetuate the memory of an occasion which had its birth in unswerving loyalty to, and faith in, the nation, and in gratitude to its brave defenders in the field.

The project of a grand North-Western Fair, for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission, originated with Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. P. Livermore, of the North-Western Sanitary Commission. They had been, on several occasions, the front of the army, and had there beheld, for themselves, the practical to working of the Sanitary Commission with which they were associated; its activity, its method, its ubiquity, its harmony with military rules and customs, and the certainty with which it may be relied on when every other means of relief proves a failure. They also saw how immense an amount of supplies is necessary to the recovery and comfort of the army of brave invalids and wounded men filling our military hospitals, and how indispensable is a well-filled treasury to the efficient action of the Commission. They believed that a grand Fair, for the benefit of our sick and wounded soldiers, would, primarily, replenish largely the treasury of the North-Western Branch of the Sanitary Commission, which, since the commencement of the war, has sent to battle-fields and hospitals nearly 80,000 boxes of sanitary stores, worth in the aggregate almost a million and a half of dollars. They believed it would also develop a grateful demonstration of the loyalty of the North-West to our beloved, but struggling country; that it would encourage the worn veterans of many a hard-fought field, and strengthen them as they perilled their lives in defense of their native land; that it would reveal the worth and claims and importance of the Sanitary Commission to those yet unaware of them, and that it would infuse into the scattered workers for our suffering soldiers, a fresh, glad, glowing impetus to future effort.

Accordingly, after consultation with the gentlemen of the North-Western Sanitary Commission, who gave their hearty approval to the plan, they issued the following circular, their principal co-workers throughout the North-West, whose names are appended thereto, promising hearty co-operation in the undertaking :

NORTH-WESTERN FAIR FOR THE SANITARY COMMISSION.

The continued need of money to obtain comforts and necessities for the sick and wounded of our army, has suggested to the loyal women of the North many and various devices for the raising of funds. Every city, town and village has had its fair, festival, party, pic-nic, excursion, concert, &c., which have netted more or less to the cause of hospital relief, according to the population of the place, and the amount of energy and patriotism employed on the occasion.

The need of money for this sacred purpose still continues. Our brave men are still wrestling with the Southern rebellion, which, though oft times beaten back, is not yet subdued ; and the hospitals made vacant by death or recovery, are speedily re-filled by new faces whom disease has rendered pallid, and new forms shattered by gun-shot or sabre stroke. We must still continue to pour down sanitary supplies for the comfort and care of our suffering soldiers, whose well-being lies near the heart of all loyal men and women. We must still continue to exercise our ingenuity for the supply of funds, since the most valuable sanitary supplies can only be obtained with money.

This continued need of money has suggested to many of the active and patriotic women of the Northwest the necessity of holding a grand North-Western Fair in the fall, for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission. After a correspondence of nearly two months with some of the principal Aid Societies and Union Leagues of the Northwest, aided in many instances by personal interviews, it has been decided to hold a North-Western Fair in Chicago, during the last week of October and the first of November, the proceeds to be devoted to the relief of our sick and suffering soldiers. Assurances have been received that the States of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota will generally join in this project, and substantial offers of aid have been proffered by leading persons in these States. A mass meeting of ladies has already been held in Chicago, at Bryan Hall, when an Executive Committee of sixteen ladies was appointed, to make such arrangements for the holding of the Fair in this city as might be necessary. It was also decided to call a convention of delegates from the Aid Societies and Union Leagues of the above-mentioned States, which shall meet in Chicago, at Bryan Hall, September 1st, at 10 o'clock A. M., to make necessary arrangements for the Fair, which shall be alike agreeable to all parties. The Order of Good Templars, an extensive Temperance organization, which has rendered very efficient help to the Sanitary Commission, by donations of money and supplies, generously volunteer their aid in this enterprise, and are included in this call. Every Aid Society and Union League, and every Lodge of Good Templars in the Northwest is therefore hereby requested to represent itself in that convention, to be held September 1st, by at least one lady delegate, elected from its members. As there are over two thousand of these organizations, it will be necessary for each one to pay the expenses of its own delegate, which will be but a small tax on each single society, but in the aggregate would be heavy for any one organization. On Wednesday, September 2d, at 3 o'clock P. M., a public meeting of the ladies of Chicago will be held at the same place, when the programme of the Fair as decided on by the convention will be announced, and such Committees as are necessary to the successful progress of the Fair will then be chosen. Various plans for the Fair have already been proposed and discussed, but nothing can definitely be agreed upon until the session of the approaching Convention.

Already great enthusiasm is manifested concerning the Fair. A piano, two or three first class sewing-machines, a knitting-machine, washing-machines, wringing-machines, a safe, cabinet ware, oil paintings, wax work, and a variety of lesser articles are already offered us. We foresee thus early, that no hall of the city will be able to accommodate the Fair, and the Executive Committee are taking steps to secure some unoccupied hotel, or recently finished block of buildings, which can be fitted up for its accommodation. The affair has greatly increased in magnitude since it was first discussed, until now it promises to eclipse any occasion of the kind ever before held in the Northwest. It is hoped and expected that gifts of all kinds will be donated. Anything rare, useful, curious or elegant in nature or art, is solicited, and it is greatly desired that the Fair shall be indebted to the handiwork of men as well as of women, for its enriching.

It is also proposed to gather a large collection of relics and mementos of the present war, for a cabinet, which shall be sold at the Fair to the highest bidder. Persons, therefore, who possess relics of the battle-field, mementos of persons and places made historic by this war, or any of the thousand specimens or curiosities which have found their way to the North from the seat of war, during its progress, are invited to donate them for the furnishing of this cabinet. As the cabinet case will be given in Chicago, it is requested that all such articles be sent to the North-Western Sanitary Commission, Chicago labeled with the name and residence of the donor, and with a brief history of the article donated. Its receipt will be immediately acknowledged by letter.

It is also proposed that a series of dinners be given on four or five days of each week of the Fair, for the increasing of the funds. These dinners are a feature of all Chicago Fairs. The materials for the dinners are furnished gratuitously by the ladies of the city in great abundance, exquisitely cooked, and of the best quality. So ample are our other arrangements for this inevitable accessory to all Fairs held in Chicago, that from 1,000 to 1,500 gentlemen who ordinarily dine down town at restaurants or eating-houses, are dined daily during the progress of a week's Fair, as elegantly and comfortably as in their own homes. Our country friends can aid us in these dinners by donations of poultry, eggs, vegetables, fruit, cream, butter, cheese, &c.

During the evenings of the Fair, it is proposed to hold a series of entertainments of the most brilliant character. Concerts, tableaux, pantomime, lectures, &c., are already discussed, and in some instances are in an incipient stage of progress. Nothing that the talent and ingenuity of the Northwest can devise will be lacking to render the evening entertainments elegant and recherché.

It is hoped that $25,000 will be the net receipts of this great festal occasion. Is this expecting too much? Not if the united Northwest lend willing and active hands and generous hearts to the work. At a simple ice-cream and strawberry festival given recently, almost impromptu, by a few ladies of Chicago, for the benefit of the Soldiers' Home, over $1,000 was made, where there was almost nothing to sell, and only the cause to attract. Is it indulging extravagant and unwarrantable expectations to hope that twenty-five times that amount will be realized by a Fair of the great Northwest, which will be enriched by the offerings of five States, and will have accessory to it all that art, talent, taste, skill, ingenuity and patriotism can devise in the matter of attraction? We cannot think so, and knowing that liberal things are being devised, we believe that liberal results will be realized.

Let us all then work for this grand object—which is, ultimately, the relief of our brave men—the sons of Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota—now languishing in hospitals for the comforts we can send them. To the Aid Societies and Union Leagues of the Northwest, we appeal most earnestly. From every Aid Society and Union League may we not expect a box or package of articles for the Fair? Anything will be acceptable, and nothing will come amiss.

Let each and all do something for this grand occasion. Invite your friends and neighbors to aid you in the work; do not rest satisfied until you have manufactured or secured something for this Soldiers' Fair. Then label the offering with your name and residence, and send it to the Committee appointed for your State, to the Aid Society of your county or town, or, if you prefer, send it directly to the Chicago Sanitary Commission, when we will acknowledge its receipt by letter. But let every one to whom this appeal comes, DO SOMETHING.

Some ten thousand of these circulars were scattered throughout the Northwest; a copy was sent to the editor of every Northwestern paper, with the request that it might appear in his columns—a request generally accorded—and clergymen were very generally invited by letter to interest their parishioners in the project.

Pursuant to this call, the convention of lady delegates from the Northwestern States was held in Chicago, September 1st and 2d, at Bryan Hall. About one hundred and fifty delegates were in attendance, while nearly twice that number of ladies from the country came in to the meeting, at some time during the sessions.

The convention was of the most harmonious and enthusiastic character. The project of the Fair met with a hearty response from all parts of the Northwest, and the delegates came instructed to pledge their respective towns for donations of every variety, and help to the extent of its need.

This convention placed the success of the Fair beyond a doubt—and those with whom the enterprise originated, were now able to see clearly that it would outdo, in interest and pecuniary profit, all other fairs ever held in the country. The entire first day, and the first half of the second, were devoted to the business which came legitimately before the convention, and which was successfully completed. On the evening of the first day a grand "Social Reunion" was held in the parlors of the Tremont House, to give the numerous ladies who had gathered from all parts of the country, an opportunity of forming each others' acquaintance, and of discussing socially the various topics of interest suggested by this convocation.

On the afternoon of the second day, a mass meeting of ladies was held in Bryan Hall, at which Thomas B. Bryan, Esq., the generous and ever-ready friend of all patriotic movements, presided. Appropriate and eloquent addresses were delivered by the President, Hon. Messrs. O. H. Lovejoy, of Ill., and Z. Chandler, of Mich., Rev. Clinton Locke, and J. S. Dennis, Esq., of this city, and Rev. O. H. Tiffany, of Evanston, Ill. The tendency of these eloquent utterances was to inspire the loftiest enthusiasm in behalf of the suffering soldier, and to nerve those who were laboring in the arduous work of hospital relief, to renewed and deeper consecration. It was a fitting close to the two days' meeting, and kindled a flame in the hearts of those who attended it, which was actively felt, as they returned to their homes, glowing with interest in the forth-coming Fair.

At this convention of lady delegates, the following committees were chosen:

All articles in the above six classes may be sent at any time during the week preceding the Fair, care being taken to ensure their arrival in Chicago by the twentieth of October.

CLASS SEVENTH.

Flowers and floral designs; green-house plants in pots. Donors of this class in Michigan will please send their offerings during the first week of the Fair; in Wisconsin and Iowa, the second week; and in Illinois at any time during the Fair. It is desirable that the same order should be observed in the sending of edibles for the dinner and refreshment tables.

CLASS EIGHTH.

Supplies for the tables: turkeys, chickens, hams, tongues, halibut, salmon, roast beef and mutton; birds and all varieties of game; pork and beans and oysters. All of these (excepting the latter,) must be thoroughly and carefully cooked. Tea, coffee, chocolate, broths, sugar and cream, so put up as to ensure its sweetness for two or three days.

Plum and other cakes that will keep; mince, apple and cranberry pies, put up carefully in racks for transportation; preserves, jellies, jams, mar- malades and canned fruits, also honey, in sealed jars; pickles of all kinds. sweet and sour, without vinegar, which will be added to them when opened for use; potatoes and vegetables of every kind, and of these too many cannot be sent.

As a great number of knives, forks and spoons will be required for the use of the tables, donations of these articles are earnestly requested. They can afterwards be reserved for future occasions, or donated to the Soldiers' Homes, always in need of these utensils.

CLASS NINTH.

Trophies, battle relics and mementoes of the war; battle-flags, rebel flags, shells, balls, guns, sabres, swords or missiles of any kind, papers and documents, accompanied by a statement of whatever gives to each its peculiar interest. These will be arranged for exhibition and sale in a room especially devoted to that purpose, and will be one of the most attractive features of the great Fair.

In addition to the articles of this kind donated for sale, it is proposed to receive for exhibition all articles from cabinets, organizations and individuals, loaned for this purpose. Hence, State Historical Societies, Military Companies, or private individuals, having articles of this class in their possession, who are willing to loan them, are requested to make known their willingness to one of the following Committee: Mrs. D. P. Livermore, Chicago, Ill.; Miss Valeria Campbell, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Dr. Carr, Madison, Wis.; and Mrs. N. H. Brainard, Iowa City, Iowa.

All pictures and works of art donated, will be arranged in a gallery, lighted so as to exhibit them to the best advantage. Loans of pictures and statuary are solicited for the exhibition. They will be handled with great care, be arranged by competent persons, and during their exhibition will be in charge of a careful custodian, and afterwards, will be well packed, and returned to their owners.

Donations of money are also needed to meet contingent expenses in the preparations for the Fair, which, in view of its great magnitude, must necessarily be heavy. There will be bills to be met for printing, mailing, painting, carpentering, cleaning of halls, expressage, decorations, &c., to liquidate which, donations of money will be indispensable. Money may be sent to either of the Committee whose names are subscribed to this Circular, or to E. W. Blatchford, the Treasurer of the Fair, care being taken to indicate the purpose for which it is donated.

All articles intended for the Fair must be sent and directed in the same manner as Hospital Stores, marked NORTH-WESTERN SANITARY COMMISSION, (for the North-Western Fair.)

At the time of shipment, a letter of notification should be sent to the Secretary of the Commission, E. B. McCagg, containing the bill of shipment and invoice of the box. Its receipt will be immediately acknowledged by letter. This will insure the free transmission of all boxes, barrels and packages.

At the close of the Fair, a complete catalogue of articles donated, with the names and residence of the donors, will be published, and a copy furnished to every contributor. Each State will be credited with the amount of its donations.

Every Aid Society, Union League, and Good Templar's Lodge in the Northwest, is requested to appoint a Committee, IMMEDIATELY, to canvass its neighborhood, and secure laborers for this great work. Clergymen, of all denominations, are urgently requested to interest their parishes in this great enterprise, and stimulate their ladies to the manufacture and donation of articles for the Fair. They can thus materially aid the noble cause of hospital relief, which needs unintermitting benefactions. Efforts for the Fair should not interfere with the regular work for the hospitals. That must, in no wise, be diminished, or postponed.

It would facilitate the labors of the Committee of Arrangements, if lists of articles promised could be forwarded to them at an early day, thus giving them power to supply important deficiencies. Letters may be addressed to Mrs. A. H. Hoge, or Mrs. D. P. Livermore, North-Western Sanitary Commission.

The Fair will be opened on Tuesday morning, October 27th, at Bryan Hall, where visitors will be informed what other Halls are in use of the Fair. The arrangements are not sufficiently perfected to make this announcement at present.

Dinner will be served in the lower Hall, (Bryan,) from 12 M. to 4 P. M., on Tuesday, October 27th, and thenceforward, every day, at the same hours, during the continuance of the Fair. Arrangements are being made to dine from 1,000 to 1,500 persons, elegantly and comfortably, during each day of the Fair.

There will be a brilliant evening entertainment, at Metropolitan Hall, on Tuesday evening, October 27th, and thenceforward every evening during the Fair. Particulars will be given hereafter in the papers, and at the Halls of Exhibition.

The hearty, prompt, and efficient co-operation of the entire Northwest, is urgently solicited. The great, ever-renewed, and painful needs of our heroic soldiers, sick and wounded, in hospitals, call for the utmost efforts of all loyal men and women, to make this affair an overwhelming pecuniary success. It should be remembered that the North-Western Branch of the U. S. Sanitary Commission bestows its benefactions on all sick and wounded soldiers, without regard to State, rank, color, army or navy. Hence, it has claims on the liberality and labor of all loyal men and women.

TO THE GERMANS.

Mrs. Governor Salomon, of Madison, Wisconsin, has kindly and generously consented to solicit and receive the contributions of the Germans for this Fair. These offerings will be sent together, will be arranged, displayed, and sold in a separate department, space being reserved for them, exclusively, over which Mrs. Salomon consents to preside in person, throughout the Fair, assisted in this work by ladies of her own selection. A most cordial and earnest invitation is extended to the German ladies of the Northwest to co-operate with Mrs. Salomon in her undertaking, with the assurance that every facility will be granted them for the display and sale of the beautiful handiwork and fancy wares in which they so greatly excel.

A meeting of the Executive Committee, held shortly after the adjournment of the Convention, voted that the general supervision of the Fair should remain throughout in the hands of Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. P. Livermore. At the same time, in connection with other committees, the following programme was arranged :

Bryan Hall will be devoted to the exhibition and sale of fancy wares, needlework, musical instruments, silver ware, dry goods, glass ware, clothing, &c., &c.

Lower Bryan Hall will be converted into a dining and refreshment saloon. Dinners will be served daily from 12 M. to 4 P. M., through the entire two weeks. From 1200 to 1500 can be dined daily, with the elegance and comfort of home. Refreshments, tea, coffee, meats, pastry, &c., can be obtained at this Hall at all other hours.

Manufacturers' Hall will be in the rear of Bryan Hall, where a temporary building will be erected for heavy manufactured articles. This will be devoted to a display of farm wagons, reapers, fanning mills, threshing machines, corn planters, steam engines, ploughs, tubs, stoves, nails, pumps, barrels of carbon oil, syrup, native wine, etc., etc.

The Supervisors' Room, in the Court House, will be occupied by captured rebel flags and battle-flags, trophies, relics and mementoes of the war, specimens from Green Bay, Lake Superior, Galena, Grand Rapids and other places, book tables, sewing machines, self-sewers and other light machinery, and a large collection of curiosities.

The Art Gallery will be arranged in the beautiful, spacious Hall, over the rooms of the Sanitary Commission, in the Theatre building. L. S. Volk, sculptor, will have this gallery in charge.

Metropolitan Hall will be reserved for evening entertainments. There will be brilliant and varied entertainments given in this Hall every evening of the Fair.

A Northwestern Fair Gazette, called The Volunteer, will be published by the ladies daily. It will be an evening paper.

The price of single tickets of admission to Bryan Hall, which shall also admit to Manufacturers' and Supervisors' Hall, shall be twenty-five cents; season tickets, one dollar. Tickets for admission to the Art Gallery, twenty-five cents; season tickets, one dollar.

Tickets for dinner, fifty cents. Extra charge for admission to Metropolitan Hall.

Preparations for the Fair now commenced in good earnest. Hitherto, the efforts had been to create a public sentiment in its favor, and to induce the prominent ladies' organizations of the Northwest, to pledge it their active support—and these ends being now obtained, the ladies entered upon the work, con-amore. Some twenty thousand copies of the second circular, specifying what articles were needed, when, where, and how they should be sent, were distributed over the Northwest—the aid of the press was again invoked, and again was it granted in a most hearty and generous fashion—governors, congressmen, members of state legislatures, military men, post-masters, clergymen and teachers, were extensively corresponded with in behalf of the Fair—while the letters addressed to the women of the Northwest, explanatory, hortatory, laudatory and earnest, were numbered by hundreds. Some idea may be formed of the amount of machinery requisite to bring forth the Northwestern Fair—the pioneer of the great Sanitary Fairs which have since followed, and are yet to come—this “first-born among many brethren”—from the fact, that on one occasion alone, there were sent from the rooms of the North-Western Sanitary Commission, seventeen bushels of mail matter, all of it relating to the Fair.

Nor was this all. Mrs. Hoge and Mrs. Livermore, and Mrs. Colt of Milwaukee, visited towns by scores, to awaken interest where special effort was needed, to stimulate and direct preparations, or to impart information. Mrs. E. C. Henshaw of Ottawa, Ill., Miss Valeria Campbell, Miss Sibley, and Mrs. Elisha Eldred of Detroit, Mrs. Dr. Ely of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Miss Rachel McFaddon of Pittsburg, Pa., were especially prominent in their respective States, in zealous exertions for the Fair, freighting the mails with rousing appeals from their pens, or with suggestions born of their experience. In every principal town “Fair Meetings” were held, which resulted in handsome pledges to the Fair, that were more than fulfilled. Towns and cities were canvassed for donations to the “bazaar” and “dining-saloon;” the Northwest was ransacked for articles rare, curious, antique, bizarre or remarkable, to add to the attractions of the “Curiosity Shop;” homes beautified with works of art, paintings or statuary, were temporarily plundered of them for the “Art Gallery,” and all who possessed artistic, decorative, dramatic or musical talent were pressed into the service of the “Evening Entertainments.”

At last, even gentlemen became inoculated with the “Fair mania,” and voluntarily came forward, pledging through the papers large donations in money or merchandise, or favoring the ladies with suggestions and aid in the work which had now grown to huge proportions, and eclipsed all other interests. The mechanics offered their machines, and gave them in, one after another—mowing-machines, reapers, threshing-machines, planters, pumps, fanning mills—until a new building, a great storehouse, had to be erected to receive them. They gave plows, stoves, furnaces, mill-stones, and nails by the hundred kegs; wagons and carriage-springs, plate glass, and huge plates of wrought iron—one, the largest ever rolled from any rolling-mill in the world—block tin, enamelled leather, hides, boxes of stationery, cases of boots, cologne by the barrel, native wine in casks, purified coal oil by the thousand gallons, a mountain howitzer, a steel breech-loading cannon, a steam-engine, pianos, organs, silver ware, crockery, trunks, pictures, boat-loads of rubble stone, loads of hay and grain and vegetables, stall-fed beeves, horses, colts, oxen, the gross receipts of the labor or business of certain days—in short, whatever they had of goods or treasure. During the last week of preparation, men atoned for their delay in giving, by a continued avalanche of gifts, till the fate of Tarpeia seemed to threaten the ladies who were the Committee of reception. What more should they do to honor this grand demonstration of womanly interest in the country, and the brave soldiers who had thrown themselves into the “imminent deadly breach,” between it and destruction? How could they give eclat to this majestic movement for the relief of the o’er-freighted hospitals?

An inaugural procession on the opening day of the Fair was proposed by J. J. Richards, Esq., of Chicago, and to his continued and wise efforts, seconded by Colonel Tucker and Philip Conley, Esq., the proposal crystalized into a glorious fact. The whole city became speedily interested in the plan, and when the opening day of the Fair arrived, October 27th, the courts adjourned, the post-office was closed, the public schools received a vacation, the banks were not opened, the Board of Trade forbore to meet, and business of all kinds, whether in offices, courts, stores, shops, or manufactories, was suspended. All the varied machinery of the great city stood still for one day, that it might do honor to the Wounded Soldiers’ Fair. Could a more eloquent tribute be paid our brave men, pining in far-off hospitals, who had jeopardized life and limb in the Nation’s cause?

No better description of this splendid inaugural pageant can be written than the following, taken from the Chicago Tribune of October 28th, which gives a graphic picture of the procession as it gathered up its forces and moved on, under the bright October sun, three miles in length:

“Yesterday will never be forgotten, either in the city of Chicago or in the West. Memorable it will remain both as history and as patriotism. Such a sight was never before seen in the West upon any occasion: and we doubt whether a more magnificent spectacle was ever presented in the streets of the Empire City itself, than the vast procession of chariots and horsemen, country wagons and vehicles, civic orders and military companies, both horse and foot, which converted Chicago for the time being into a vast theatre of wonders.

“From the earliest dawn of the day, the heart of the mighty city was awake, and long before eight o’clock the streets were thronged with people. Citizens hurried excitedly to and fro, and country women, with their children, came in early in the morning, with colors tied to their bridles, and decorating their wagons, and with miniature flags and banners on their horses’ heads. From the house-tops, from the public buildings, was displayed the glorious flag of liberty. By nine o’clock the city was in a roar: the vast hum of multitudinous voices filled the atmosphere. Drums beat in all parts of the city summoning the various processions, or accompanying them to the grand central rendezvous. Bands of music playing patriotic tunes—bands of young men and women, singing patriotic songs, enlivened the streets. Every path-way was jammed up with human bodies, so that it was with extreme difficulty any headway could be made.

“The procession was advertised to assemble at nine o’clock precisely, and was composed of nine divisions, formed in the following order:

The First Division formed on Michigan Avenue—the right resting on Lake.

The Second Division formed on Wabash Avenue—the right resting on Lake.

The Third Division on State Street—right resting on Lake.

The Fourth Division formed on Dearborn Street—right resting on Lake.

The Fifth Division formed on Clark Street—right resting on Lake.

The Sixth Division formed on Lasalle Street—right resting on Lake.

The Seventh Division formed on Wells Street—right resting on Lake.

The Eighth Division formed on Franklin Street—right resting on Lake.

The Ninth Division formed on Market Street, the right resting on Lake Street, extending to Madison Street Bridge.

"As near ten o'clock as possible it started, banners flying, drums rolling, and all manner of brazen instruments stirring the air and the hearts of the vast multitudes of people with thrilling, exciting music. On it came, that mighty pageant, following the course laid down in the printed programme.

"From Michigan Avenue west on Lake to Market Street; on Market Street south to Washington Street; on Washington east to Clark Street; on Clark south to Harrison street; on Harrison Street east to Michigan Avenue; north on Michigan Avenue to Lake Street; west on Lake Street to Lasalle; south on Lasalle to the Court-House Square.

"Such earnest enthusiasm as accompanied the procession, from first to last, has rarely been witnessed on any occasion. It was a grand sublime protest on behalf of the people, against the poltroons and traitors who were enemies to the Government and opposed to the war. Bursts of patriotic feeling came from many a loyal bosom on that memorable and never-to-be-forgotten day. The people seemed to overflow with loyalty, and could not contain themselves. For a long time they had been silent, nursing their wrath, keeping alive their love for the old flag, keeping alive also their hatred of those that hated it—who had so long fired upon it in the rear—finding nowhere, in no event, in no newspaper, any adequate utterance of their passionate feelings. Now the mighty eloquence of that majestic and sublime procession spoke for them! That was the thing which they all along had wanted to say—but could not! They were in themselves cyphers, mere units of the nation; but there, in all those thousands of men, they saw themselves multiplied into an incalculable, irresistible host, and felt that their hour of triumphant speech had come at last! That was the answer which they thundered out in trumpet tones to the miserable traitors who had so long torn the bleeding heart of their country.

"'I always knew,' said one old man at our elbow, in the crowd, whilst we were watching the procession, 'that the heart of the people was all right. They didn't know their danger for a long while. Now they've found it out—and this is what they say about it!'

"The procession was remarkable in many respects as a pageant, and particularly in the number of fine horses which accompanied it. A larger number of well-mounted men has rarely been seen in a civic procession. The police came at the head of it, under the command of Capt. Nelson—a fine body of men, with capital horses, looking as bold and brave as heroes.

"After these followed, in stately march, the Michigan Sharp-shooters; the 1st Regiment of Illinois State Militia (Chicago City Guard,) a fine lot of fellows! and the whole of the First Division, with their bands, and flags, and panoply of war.

"Amongst these, the carriage containing the captured flags attracted much attention, and excited great enthusiasm. These were the flaunting rags which the rebels had borne on many a battle-field, and which our brave soldiers had torn from the hands of their standard-bearers. There they were, bellorum exuvia, spoils of war, flaunting no longer in haughty defiance at the head of rebel armies, but carried in triumph at the head of a civic procession in the peaceful streets of Chicago. Many a tearful memory they must have conjured up in the minds of spectators there present, whose sons were in the battles where these flags were taken; and many of whom are at rest forever in their bloody soil.

"The Second and Third Divisions followed, and it was a most picturesque and pleasing sight to behold the long lines of members of the various lodges, societies, and associations of the city, in their many-colored regalias. Then came the benevolent societies, the religious orders making an imposing spectacle, which it would require the painter's art to represent, and to which no words could do anything like justice.

"The Fifth Division, ushered by a fine band, and headed by J. Q. Hoyt, Esq., then came tramping by. There were scores of carriages, containing members of the press, the clergy, the municipal authorities, judges and officers of the courts, governors and ex-governors of States, &c., &c.

"One of the most strikingly beautiful features of the procession was a superbly decorated four-horse car, bearing the employes of the liberal-hearted Wheeler & Wilson Manufacturing Company, represented in this city by Geo. B. Chittenden, Esq., and suggestive, by the presence of working women and sewing machines at work upon soldiers' overcoats, of the utility of the sewing-machine in clothing armies.

"Then the Sixth Division, consisting of wagons choked with children, singing the song of 'John Brown's Body Lies Mouldering in the Grave!'

"Then the Seventh Division of butchers, horse-shoers—of ponies and oxen, contributed; and last, but not least—nay, greatest and mightiest of all—the sublime spectacle of the Lake County Delegation.

"THE LAKE COUNTY DELEGATION.

"A striking and noticeable feature of the procession, was the long string of farmers' teams from Lake County. They came into the city at an early hour in the forenoon, and sufficiently early to join the procession. There were one hundred wagons, loaded to overflowing with vegetables, the staid old horses decorated with little flags, and larger flags pendent from the wagons, and held by stout farmer hands. The leading wagon of the procession carried a large banner bearing this inscription: 'THE GIFT OF LAKE COUNTY TO OUR BRAVE BOYS IN THE HOSPITALS, THROUGH THE GREAT NORTH-WESTERN FAIR.' It was a great and beautiful free-will offering of the sturdy farmers, whose hearts beat true to freedom and the Union. No part of the procession attracted so many eyes, and no heartier cheers went up from the thousands who thronged the streets than those given, and thrice repeated, for the Lake County farmers and their splendid donation. There were no small loads. Every wagon was filled to overflowing with great heaps of potatoes; and silver-skinned onions, mammoth squashes, huge beets and turnips, monster cabbages, barrels of cider and rosy apples, load after load, with many a gray-haired farmer driving, face weather-beaten, frame rugged, hands bronzed, and eyes sparkling with the excitement of the project his big heart conceived. And back of the farmer, mounted on the vegetables, were the boys, filled to repletion with fun. At the end of the route of the procession, the teams drove up to the Sanitary Commission Rooms, and unloaded their precious freights of stores into the garner, whence they will go to the boys in the field.

"This harvest home was a sight to bring tears to the eyes of any man but a confirmed copperhead. There was an eloquence in it, a moral grandeur which spoke louder than any words. It told that the farmers, the men and women of the country, were yet confident of success. that despair or distress, had not entered into their calculations, and that the boys in the field were reaping the best of their crops. There was no display, no advertisement looking behind their contribution. It was a free-will offering from their generous hearts, for which they will have no recompense, save the love and all recompense, the blessings of the gallant fellows in camp and in the field. God bless the Lake County farmers!

The procession arrived at the Court House about ten o'clock, when the band struck up some patriotic tunes; after which Thomas B. Bryan, Esq., addressed the people, substantially as follows:

ADDRESS OF THOMAS B. BRYAN, ESQ.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—I congratulate you upon this imposing pageant! It is indeed an auspicious prelude to the great Fair, the inauguration of which it is designed to celebrate. The civic and military procession embraces within its ranks men of all ages, all professions and all nationalities. The voice of party, like the hum of business, is this day silenced. The municipal authorities, in patriotic proclamations, have recommended a general suspension of business. Barred doors and windows, empty houses and full streets, give proof of the prompt and universal response of the citizens.

And why this unprecedented observance of a day not sacred as a national holiday? Why the thousands of flags gayly fluttering in the breeze or festooning the columns of bazaar and hall? Why this clogging of the wheels of the busy machinery of this great commercial emporium? Why this vast concourse of men, women and children, all clad in holiday attire, and inspired by the very magnetism of their own numbers? Why this mammoth procession, with its cavalcade, its banners, and its martial music? Is it the triumphal entry of a newly laureled military chieftain? Or is it the grateful welcome of some illustrious statesman, endeared by his public services to the hearts of his countrymen? No! It is pregnant with a higher and more impressive significance. It is the spontaneous tribute of a people's gratitude to the armies of the Union! The great heart of the Northwest pulsates with all a mother's pride and love for her patriot sons. She summoned them to battle for an imperilled Union, and they yielded prompt and cheerful obedience to her behests. And may she not be justly proud of their heroic fortitude and valorous deeds? Proud of their noble endurance of the privations, toils and exposures of this eventful war—proud of their glorious triumphs in deadly contests with outnumbering hosts—aye, even of the graves, which, on every battle-field remain as enduring memorials of their heroism?

And on this gala-day, we send special greetings to the common soldiers. All glorious has been their fidelity to their country's flag, a fidelity that has proved itself a fortress impregnable to all assaults, and to all the enginery of evil. Though their names are unheralded with the tidings of triumph, we shall never forget that their bravery and blood have aided in winning the garlands of victory, which encircle the brows of their leaders.

"A thousand glorious actions that might claim
Triumphant laurels and immortal fame,
Confused in crowds of glorious actions lie,
And troops of heroes undistinguished die."

How refreshing in this tragical era of strife and carnage, to hear amid the clash of arms, the gentle voice of woman's charity—to hear of her faithful vigils about the bed of languishing, and of her ministrations of mercy and sympathy among scenes of suffering and death. It is to promote such noble ends, to provide through the Sanitary Commission, for the necessities of our patriot soldiers, that this grand fair is instituted, to which the present ovation is introductory. It is an enterprise born of woman, and nursed to maturity by her skill, her taste and untiring zeal. Most sedulously have the noble women of the Northwest labored to provide for this festival all that ingenuity could devise, or art create.

It remains for the people practically to evince their appreciation of these labors, that they may not be unrequited. Surely, men, if you fully realize that the promised success of the forthcoming, varied and grandly imposing exhibition is wholly ascribable to woman's indomitable energy and executive power, you will henceforth be prouder than ever before of your mothers and your wives. A new zest will be imparted to the toast—"Woman! God bless her!" Perhaps yon gallant firemen will coin another: "Woman! the love of whom is the only fire alike harmless and unquenchable." At any rate the women of this day will nerve the soldier's arm, and animate his heart. (Cheers.) As a bright sun propitiously smiles upon this day's ceremonies, so may the sunshine of woman's charity illumine the soldier's pathway.

The noble generosity which characterizes the contributions from abroad, challenges the emulation of our own citizens. General thrift and prosperity lavish their blessings upon our young city, and we are called to respond from our abundance to the demands of charity. The appeal is in the cause of humanity. Let it not fall upon our ears unheeded.

Fellow citizens! to the general display around us, I design to contribute no needless display of words. My province is to announce, as requested, that the opening of the Fair will be indicated by the firing of a cannon, and as a simple discharge of the gun is sufficient for that purpose, so, in my instance, brief and simple utterances are most appropriate to the occasion.

Hark! The gun fires! Throw open the public halls, the doors also of your hospitable houses, and the portals of your generous hearts—FOR THE NORTHWESTERN FAIR IS OPEN!

As the last gun of the thirty-four that were fired boomed on the ears of the vast multitude, they surged, like tidal waves, towards Bryan Hall, which, according to the programme, was the first of the six Halls occupied by the Fair, to be entered. The Lake County delegation, however, proceeded first to the rooms of the Sanitary Commission, to unload their precious freight. The hundred wagons drew up before the doors, and soon the sidewalks and street were filled with boxes, barrels and sacks, scores and hundreds of bystanders eagerly putting their shoulders to the work, proud to aid in unloading the soldiers' produce. Madison street, for a square, was blockaded half an hour, and the progress of the street-cars was arrested, until two or three stood waiting on the rails—but nobody grumbled. Instead of fault-finding, there were cheers for the farmers, hearty hand shakings, offers of help, congratulations and benedictions. Many a rough fellow who elbowed his way into the crowd to lend a hand at the disburdening of the wagons, found his before ever-ready words now fail him, and turned to dash away with his coat-sleeve, unwonted tears, of which he need not have been ashamed.

"Many of the farmers," says one who was an eye-witness of the scene—"were sun-burnt men, with hard and rigid features; and a careless observer would have said that there was surely nothing in those wagons, as they passed, to awaken any sentiment. Yet something there was about it all which brought tears to the eyes of hundreds, as the old farmers, with their heavy loads, toiled by. Among the crowd of spectators there was a broad-shouldered Dutchman, with a face expressive of anything but thought or feeling; he gazed at this singular procession as it passed,—the sun-burnt farmers, the long, narrow wagons, the endless variety of vegetables and farm produce,—he gazed at those men with their sober faces and homely gifts passed one by one, until when, finally, the last wagon had moved by, this stolid, lethargic-looking man “broke down” with a flood of tears, and could say nothing and do nothing but seize upon the little child whom he held by the hand, and hug her to his heart, trying to hide his manly tears behind her floating curls.

“Among these wagons which had drawn up near the rooms of the Sanitary Commission to unload their stores, was one peculiar for its exceeding look of poverty. It was worn and mended, and was originally made merely of poles. It was drawn by three horses which had seen much of life, but little grain. The driver was a man past middle age, with the clothes and look of one who had toiled hard, but he had a thoughtful and kindly face. He sat there quietly waiting his turn to unload. By his side, with feet over the front of the wagon, for it was filled very full, was his wife, a silent, worn-looking woman (many of these men had their wives with them on the loads); near the rear of the wagon was a girl of fifteen, perhaps, and her sister, dressed in black, carrying in her arms a little child.

“Some one said to this man; (after asking the woman with the child if she would not go into the Commission rooms and get warm:) ‘My friend, you seem to have quite a load here of vegetables; now I am curious to know what good things you are bringing to the soldiers; will you tell me what you have?’ ‘Yes,’ said he: ‘here are potatoes, and here are three bags of onions, and there are some ruta-baga, and there are a few turnips, and that is a small bag of meal, and you will see the cabbages fill in; and that box with slats has some ducks in it, which one of them brought in.’ ‘Oh! then this isn’t all your load, alone, is it?’ ‘Why, no! our region just where I live is rather a hard soil, and we haven’t any of us much to spare any way, yet for this business we could have raked up as much again as this is, if we had had time; but we didn’t get the notice that the wagons were going in till last night about eight o’clock, and it was dark and raining at that, so I and my wife and the girls could only go around to five or six of the neighbors within a mile or so, but we did the best we could; we worked pretty much all the night and loaded, so as to be ready to get out to the main road and start with the rest of them this morning; but I can’t help it if it is little, it’s something for those soldiers.’ ‘Have you a son in the army?’ ‘No,’ he answered slowly, after turning round and looking at his wife. ‘No, I haven’t now, but we had one there once; he’s buried down by Stone River; he was shot there;—and that isn’t just so either—we called him our boy, but he was only our adopted son; we took him when he was little, so he was just the same as our own boy, and” (pointing over his shoulder without looking back) ‘that’s his wife there with the baby! But I shouldn’t bring these things any quicker if he were alive now and in the army; I don’t know that I should think so much as I do now about the boys away off there.’ It was in turn for his wagon to unload, so with his rough freight of produce, and his rich freight of human hearts with their deep and treasured griefs, he drove on—one wagon of a hundred in the train.”

The back room of the Commission was speedily filled with wheat. Mr. McVicker then tendered the use of his capacious cellar, under the Theatre, and that also was filled; and at last storage was offered in the large cellars of some of the commission houses of the city, which alone were adequate to the reception of the farmers' donation. While unloading their treasure, a messenger approached the farmers, with an invitation from the lady-managers, to come to Lower Bryan Hall, and partake of a dinner waiting for them. The sturdy, warm-hearted yeomen, accompanied by the marshals of the several divisions, marched to the Hall, where they were warmly welcomed by the ladies, and all present. Hon. E. M. Haines, formerly of Lake county, presented to the Committee of Arrangements the donation made by his old neighbors, in a brief and appropriate address, to which Rev. Dr. Patton, of the Northwestern Sanitary Commission responded, in a handsome speech of acceptance and thanks.

A touching little episode occurred while the farmers of Lake county were at dinner. In the neighborhood of their table others were set, at one of which several soldiers were dining. Chancing to observe them, during a pause in the dinner, one of the farmers discovered, in a bronzed and blue-coated soldier-boy, nearly opposite him, his own son, whom he had not seen for two years and a half, and who was now on his way home from Vicksburg, on a short furlough. The discovery and recognition were mutual. Father and son started up at the same glad moment, and in the touching language of Scripture, literally "fell on each other's necks, and wept." This little occurrence gave new zest to the dinner, and added to the excitement of the hour.

BRYAN HALL.

The inaugural ceremonies being over, we will follow the multitude to Bryan Hall, transformed for the nonce into a bazaar, rivalling those of the Orient in gorgeousness and bewildering beauty. The internal arrangement was planned by an architect of this city, Mr. Van Osdell, and was in harmony with the architecture of the Hall. No incongruity offended the eye, as one entered the Hall, and the coup d'œil could not but satisfy the most fastidious.

A semi-circle of double booths followed the curve of the gallery, and another semi-circle back of that was arranged against the wall, a broad aisle being left between for promenade. The booths against the wall were extended completely around it. In the centre of the Hall, under the dome, a large octagonal pagoda was erected, two stories in height, the lower floor occupied by the fair saleswomen and their brilliant wares, while in the gallery overhead sat the band, discoursing music through the afternoons and evenings.

The platform was metamorphosed into a perfect bower of beauty. Booths were arranged against the wall here as elsewhere. The front of the platform was divided into five open compartments, each surmounted by an arch, the centre one being the highest. The columns supporting these were fluted with "red, white and blue," which were the only colors used in the decorations, except the natural green of the pine garlands and wreaths. Crowning the centre arch was a painting, representing the Genius of America victorious over her enemies ; and back of this, and yet higher, was a larger painting, crowning the arch of the center booth, and symbolical of the fraternization of Germania and America. A most appropriate decoration, as the German ladies of Milwaukee and Chicago had supreme possession of this part of the Hall, and had beautified it with their wondrous handiwork, and with donations of rich and rare articles from their patriotic trades-people, given for the benefit of the Fair.

The decorating of the Halls was happily intrusted to a Committee of German artists, which gave a unity, an artistic style, and a beauty to them that immediately commanded attention. The decorations were eminently patriotic in character, and full of significance in the present history of the country. Festoons of red, white and blue were pendent from the gallery, around which were arranged mottoes, dear to the hearts of patriots. Each booth was arched, and gracefully draped and festooned with the national colors. Groups of the dear old flag were clustered in all appropriate places—it floated overhead, it depended from arches, and entwined columns—it was looped in silken folds over the door of entrance and of egress from the Hall, so that all passed under its storied canopy who visited the Fair. The centre octagonal pagoda, whose roof was formed by a series of evergreen bands, suspended from the top of the central pole on which the structure rested, was surmounted by a magnificent gray eagle, with spreading wings, with the flag of the country, unfurled, beside him. Not only in Bryan Hall, but in all the others in use of the Fair, the predominance of the flag as a decoration, was very noteworthy. Soldiers fresh from the battlefield, on their way home on brief furloughs, as they entered the hall, would glance around on the beloved banner every where displayed, which they had followed to victory, and for which they had endured hardship, sickness, gunshot, sabre-stroke and mutilation, and tears would course down their brown faces, which they could not repress.

But what shall be said of the goods and wares here exhibited for sale, whose profusion was no less astonishing than its variety? It would be easier to enumerate what was not here than to give a list of the articles exhibited for sale. Worsteds and needle-work of all kinds, and in most exquisite styles ; children's and gentlemen's clothing ; millinery, embroidery, a large and most beautiful variety of articles made from cones, shells, beads, wax, seeds, hair, feathers and flowers ; a varied and extensive assortment of toys, dolls, perfumery, &c. ; Bohemian and cut glass ware, Sèvres china, Etruscan vases ; silver ware and jewelry to the amount of thousands of dollars ; oil paintings, water color sketches, statuettes, cabinet ware ; clocks in rare styles, and of exquisite workmanship; pianos, five in number, worth from $400 to $600 apiece; melodeons, monitor organs, knitting machines; a camel's hair shawl, worth $800; cloaks, Honiton laces, Chinese and Japanese and lacquered ware, rare exotics in pots, and bouquets of cut flowers, confectionery—in short, almost every species of saleable and fancy goods were on exhibition, and for sale at the bazaar.

Nor was there any lack of purchasers. From eight o'clock in the morning until ten at night, and frequently till a later hour, Bryan Hall was densely packed with an eager and interested crowd. The same is true of all other halls in use of the Fair. To judge from the liberality of the crowds of new comers, one would have supposed that each carried the inexhaustible purse which the Fairy gave Fortunatus, for there was no higgling about prices—no backwardness about buying. People were eager to invest in the Fair. If the sales slackened, the fair traders had but to utter the talismanic words, "Buy, for the sake of the soldiers," and they proved the "Open, Sesame," to all purses and pockets. The affable saleswomen, who, at the opening of the Fair were dismayed at les embarras des richesses, that piled their counters, remembering that four times as much more lay snugly packed in boxes underneath, saw their goods disappear like dew before the sun, and the second week found them exercising their women's ingenuity to replenish their rapidly disappearing stock.

Arrangements had been made with the railroads to run excursion trains each day from different parts of the country. This brought new crowds daily of large-hearted, loyal, whole-souled country people, who brought with them a fresh gush of natural feeling and glowing patriotism, and before whose unselfishness and incorruptible devotion to country, the disloyalty of the city shrank back abashed. The weather had no effect on the throngs—rain or shine, cold or warm, calm or blustering, Bryan Hall was so densely packed that it was at times impossible to cross it. Policemen were stationed at the door of entrance, to enforce the regulation that people must enter at one door, and go out by another; and the sales of tickets were sometimes stopped for an hour or two at a time, to relieve the over-crowded Hall. It was ascertained from the door-keepers that the average daily attendance was six thousand.

It is impossible to describe in detail the many rare and beautiful articles which attracted attention in this Hall, and we must refer our readers to the list of donations appended to this history for an enumeration of them. The most noteworthy of all, and that in which the widest interest was felt, was the original manuscript of President Lincoln's "Proclamation of Emancipation," the gift of the President to the Fair, who accompanied it with the following characteristic letter.

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Oct. 26, 1863."

"To the Ladies having in charge the Northwestern Fair for the Sanitary Commission, Chicago, Illinois :

"According to the request made in your behalf, the original draft of the Emancipation Proclamation is herewith enclosed. The formal words at the top, and the conclusion, except the signature, you perceive, are not in my handwriting. They were written at the State Department, by whom I know not. The printed part was cut from a copy of the preliminary proclamation, and pasted on, merely to save writing. I had some desire to retain the paper ; but if it shall contribute to the relief or comfort of the soldiers, that will be better.

"Your obedient servant,

"A. LINCOLN."

The manuscript was purchased for $8,000, by T. B. Bryan, Esq., for the Chicago Soldiers' Home, of which Association he is President. It has been finely lithographed, and copies are now being sold by the Board of Managers, for the benefit of a permanent Home for invalid soldiers. At the time of writing, it has already added some thousands of dollars to this fund, and very much more will accrue from it to "the relief and comfort of the soldiers."

THE GERMAN DEPARTMENT.

The notice of Bryan Hall would be incomplete without some special mention of the beautiful "German Department" of the Fair. Although the German population were by no means backward in contributing to the Fair, it was suggested by Mrs. Governor Salomon that a much larger sum would be realized from the offerings of the ladies, if they could be collected and displayed in a separate department, presided over by themselves exclusively. It lacked but two or three weeks of the opening of the Fair when this proposal was made ; but the work was entered upon with great energy, and the display of fancy work, embroideries, &c., was astonishingly beautiful. We regret very much that these noble co-workers have furnished us with no list of their donations, or the names of the donors ; and that we are unable even to record accurately the names of the ladies to whom the Fair was most deeply indebted for this attractive and profitable addition.

Mrs. Gov. Salomon appealed to the patriotism of the German ladies in Milwaukee, whose husbands and brothers had bravely gone forth to defend their adopted Country. With the assistance of personal friends, she succeeded in creating a general interest in Milwaukee, Madison, Watertown, Manitowoc and Sauk City. In Chicago, she called to her aid the Staats Zeitung, and enlisted the co-operation of the most active and patriotic of the German ladies of this city. Short as was the time, less than three weeks, there was realized from the sales of this department over $4,000—the articles consisting almost entirely of needle-work of the most elaborate and beautiful character. Of this sum, the Chicago ladies made about $2,300.

Among the exquisite articles of this department was a splendid white silk embroidered flag, surpassing anything in the way of embroidery on exhibition. It seemed at first glance more like painting than needle-work. It was the work of Mrs. Fulkner, of Fond du Lac, Wis., who wrought industriously with her needle for eighteen months to complete it. A portrait of Mozart adorned the center of the flag, surrounded by musical instruments, while underneath were the notes of his celebrated opera, Don Giovanni. The flag was intended to grace the halls of a musical society, and a subscription was instantly set on foot by the lovers of music to purchase it for the Chicago Philharmonic Society. The sum for its purchase, $150, was easily raised, and this unequalled piece of needle-work is now in the possession of the Philharmonic Society of Chicago.

Had the suggestion of the German Department been made at an earlier day, there would have been handsome donations from the Germans of the other Northwestern States, and from the interior of Illinois and Wisconsin. And were it possible to eliminate the gifts of Germans whose donations were mingled promiscuously with those of Americans in almost every city and town, the sum total would speak loudly in testimony of German patriotism. As German sons, husbands and brothers have mingled their life-blood with that of Americans, on almost every field of battle, it was well that their offerings for the relief of sick and wounded soldiers should be poured into the same receptacle, and the proceeds of their sale flow into the same treasury.

THE DINING HALL.

Lower Bryan Hall was occupied as a dining and refreshment hall, and the promise of the ladies to dine 1,500 people daily, with home comfort and elegance, was amply fulfilled. Mrs. O. E. Hosmer and Mrs. W. E. Franklin had this hall in charge, and to their admirable management, seconded by a very superior corps of experienced ladies, the entire success of the daily dinners was mainly attributable. The rush to this hall was as great as to the others, and hundreds went away on some days, to restaurants and hotels, for lack of accommodation. The system with which the dinners were managed merits a passing notice.

The city was thoroughly canvassed for donations to the Fair, every district being taken by a lady and faithfully visited by her. The names and residences of all who would contribute to the dinner-tables were taken, with the articles they would furnish, and the days when they would furnish them. The canvassing over, a meeting of the canvassers was held, and the aggregate supply for each day ascertained. Previous experience in these Fair dinners had taught the ladies what quantities of each article were necessary for one dinner—so many turkeys, so many roasts, so many ducks, so many pies, so many puddings, so many gallons of milk, so many pounds of coffee, so many cans of oysters, &c., &c. If the amount pledged for each day was not sufficient, the Dinner Committee were then prepared beforehand to supply deficiencies. These supplies thus pledged were sent to the dining hall on the promised days, or to depots appointed in the various divisions of the city, from whence express wagons ran daily to the hall, at specified hours.

In addition to this source of supply, large quantities of ready-cooked food were sent from various parts of the country, notification of the time when it might be expected having been previously mailed to the Committee. Michigan sent immense quantities of the finest fruit, a dozen times as much as was required by the exigencies of the refreshment tables. As it was mostly late varieties of apples, all surplus barrels were immediately despatched to the hospitals, from whence, in due time, came grateful acknowledgement of the welcome donation. Grundy county, Illinois, sent game almost exclusively, nicely cooked and carefully packed, and forwarded with such despatch that it had hardly time to cool before it was delivered by the express. Elgin, Illinois, from her abundant dairies, supplied a large proportion of the milk used during the Fair—her “milkmen” calling regularly at the dinner-hour with overflowing cans. Nor must we omit to mention the generous manner in which Dubuque came to the help of the dining hall. The Dubuque ladies, who visited the Fair during the first week, learned that there was a scarcity of poultry pledged for certain days of the week following. They hastened home, and set themselves about making up the deficiency. Two or three of their best “shots” were instantly sent off “gunning.” A general raid was made on the hen-coops; turkeys were begged or bought by the dozen, and on the days when they had promised edibles, they sent to Chicago over one hundred turkeys, two hundred ducks, and nearly as many chickens, exquisitely cooked, which were carried, piping hot, from the kitchens to the express car. In order that they might go freshly cooked to the Fair, several of the ladies sat up all the previous night, and gave personal help and supervision to the work, dressing, baking and packing these fowls with their own hands. By some mystery of the cuisine, which it is not our province to divulge, they were, on their arrival in Chicago, brought to the table as smoking hot as though they had just made their debut from the bake-pan.

Fourteen tables were set in the dining hall, with accommodations for about three hundred at one time. Each table was reset four and five times, daily. Six ladies were appointed to take charge of each table throughout the Fair, two of whom presided daily—one to pour coffee, the other to maintain general supervision. These ladies were the wives of Congressmen, professional men, clergymen, editors, merchants, bankers, millionaires—none were above serving at the Soldiers' Fair dinners. Each presiding lady furnished the table-linen and silver for her table, and added such decorations and delicacies as her taste suggested, or she could secure from her friends and acquaintances. The table-waiters were the young ladies of the city—neat-handed, swift-footed, bright-eyed, pleasant-voiced maidens, who, accustomed to being served in their own homes, transformed themselves for the nonce, for the dear sake of the suffering soldiers, into servants. Both the matrons who presided, and the pretty girls who served, were neatly attired in a simple uniform of white caps and aprons, made, trimmed and worn, to suit the varied tastes and styles of the wearers.

A more picturesque scene than the Dining Hall afforded, when dinner was in progress, cannot be imagined. The decorations were like those of the other Halls, with the national flag waving over every table, and crowning the table ornaments. As the Hall was dim, the gas was lighted day and night. The numerous tables crowded with gentlemen and ladies, who had come to dine—the long line of carvers—one for each variety of meats—who had closed the ledger and laid down the pen, to don the white apron and knife of this department; the graceful girls in their pretty uniform, darting hither and thither in the discharge of their novel duties,—the agreeable matrons, who received all who came to their tables, as they would honored guests in their own home,—the crowds who stood round, determined to dine in this Hall, and good-naturedly bidding their turn with many a bon mot, which provoked constant sallies of laughter,—the continual in-coming of fresh trays, and baskets and pails, laden with viands for the dinner—all this formed an animated and unusual picture that pen cannot portray. There was no lack of sociality at these dinners: mirth and laughter were as abundant as the food: wit held high carnival, and a stranger, ignorant of the occasion, would have been tempted to believe this a new Babel, where a second “confusion of tongues” had been wrought.

A kitchen was appended to the Dining Hall, where the heavy work was done by servants, and into whose penetralia only a favored few were admitted. The rule was inexorable, and woe to the curious wight who ventured within its precincts. Little ceremony was employed in enforcing his departure. Checks laid beside the plate, indicated to each his indebtedness, which was more or less, according to the bill of fare which he had ordered. These bills were settled at the table of the cashier, who gave in return a receipt in the form of another check, on the presentation of which at the door, the party offering it was allowed to leave the Hall. This method, it will be perceived, was a certain prevention of dishonesty, if any were wickedly disposed to leave without settling their bills. No department of the Fair required more executive skill in its management, and none was more popular or successful.

MANUFACTURERS' HALL.

A temporary hall was erected, adjoining Bryan Hall on the east, for the reception of the heavy and bulky machinery contributed. A hall on the ground floor was necessary for this purpose, and such a hall Chicago did not possess. It was so constructed that it was entered from Bryan Hall by a side door. The contributions to this department were very liberal, embracing almost every article of farm and household economy, and were sufficient in number and importance for a good-sized State Fair. As the articles contributed were mostly manufactured by the contributors especially for this purpose, they were made of the best material, and in the very best style of workmanship. In some remote districts, where the knowledge of the Fair only penetrated at a late day, manufacturers donated to the Fair orders for machinery not yet made. An order of this kind was sent from Decatur, Ill., for $600 worth of machinery, which is good until next July.

Of plows, there were a score or more, embracing almost every patent: nails were donated in kegs by the hundred; the stoves could be numbered by dozens, there being no two of the same pattern: barrels of carbon oil, of almost every brand, were piled on one another, no inconsiderable portion of the space being allotted to them: there were some half dozen sets of scales, four of them of the Messrs. Fairbanks' manufacture, worth $100 each: reapers and mowers that had borne off the prizes at several State Fairs: a threshing machine, which had been the worthy recipient of similar honors: corn-shellers and corn-planters, straw-cutters, and grain and grass-seed drills, fanning-mills and anti-freezing pumps, sugar mills and marble mantles, nests of washtubs, dozens of pails, every style of washing and wringing machine, patent indicating oil funnels, mill-stones, knife and scissors sharpeners, cases of boots, "Saratoga" trunks, "common sense churns," carriage springs, axles, hub and buggy spokes—in short, specimens of every branch of Northwestern manufacture.

That which attracted the most attention was a beautiful ten-horse power upright engine, made and presented by the generous hearted employes of the Chicago Eagle Works—every member of the establishment contributing to it. It was a beautiful and thoroughly built piece of machinery. A boiler was also contributed by the boiler shops of the city, so that the engine was run during the Fair, exciting great admiration by its easy and almost noiseless movements. They were sold by ticket for $1,000, E. W. Blatchford, Esq., the indefatigable Treasurer of the Northwestern Commission, as also of the Fair, holding the lucky ticket, and drawing the prize.

Too much praise cannot be awarded the mechanics of the Northwest, a nobler race than whom never lived, for their interest in donating to the Fair. In several instances the employes of manufactories clubbed together, and worked "after hours," and built machines for the Fair. When this was not possible, they contributed of their money, and sent a donation in cash to increase its funds, or they gave the entire proceeds of certain days' work. Not only did they contribute articles of their manufacture, but in the evenings they came and assisted the ladies to sell them, disposing of the heaviest by raffling, and finding purchasers among their own customers for others. God bless them! in the workshop or on the battle-field, the mechanics of the Northwest have proved themselves the same brave, true, noble-hearted men.

"THE CURIOSITY SHOP."

The Supervisors' Hall in the Court House, occupied mostly by the sessions of the County Court, Judge Bradwell presiding, was surrendered to the ladies, to be occupied by them as a "Curiosity Shop." Not only did Judge Bradwell obligingly adjourn his Court for two weeks, and give up his room to the Fair, but he gave his services also to assist in arranging and superintending this department. Mrs. Dr. Carr, of Madison, Wis., and Mrs. Wm. E. Doggett, of Chicago, aided by Mrs. A. Fox and Mrs. Charles H. Morton, of Quincy, Ill., presided in this hall, and were busily occupied each day in giving to the curious multitude the histories of the innumerable articles here collected. Much of the interest felt in this department was due to their efforts.

This hall was one of the most attractive features of the Fair. Almost everything ever seen or read of in modern books or papers was found here. First of all, and more attractive than aught else, were the battle-torn flags of our own regiments, and the captured rebel flags. The fourteen rebel flags, glorious trophies of victory, loaned for exhibition by Secretary Stanton, at the request of Hon. I. N. Arnold, of Chicago, excited very general interest. They were borne in the inaugural procession, and afterwards hung around the walls of this room. There were also the battle-flags of the 1st, 2d, 6th, 10th, 12th and 17th Wisconsin Regiments. The 1st bore the inscription, "Chaplain Hills; the 2d, "Fourteen Battles;" the 6th, "Five Battles;" and the 10th, "Chaplain Hills and Stone River." Then there were the battered and torn flags of the 19th, 88th, 55th, 17th, 89th, 51st and 45th Illinois, the latter conspicuous for rags and tatters above all others. It had been successfully carried by the 45th, the "Washburne Lead Mine Regiment," through the sanguinary battles of Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Medon Station, Tallahatchie, Port Gibson, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hills, Fort Hill, and Vicksburg. This Regiment, bearing aloft this banner, led the "forlorn hope" in the assault on Fort Hill, in the rear of Vicksburg, on the 25th of June, 1863; and it was the first one planted on that rebel stronghold. On the 4th of July, when our army entered Vicksburg, this flag had the honor of being selected by Gen. Grant to be first unfurled over the Court House in that captured city.

On the south wall hung the flag of the 1st Michigan, which bore a conspicuous part in the battle of Bull Run, where its brave commander, Col. Wilcox, was made a prisoner, and held in durance vile for more than a year. After this came the battle-flags of the 9th, 16th, and 24th Michigan Regiments, and of the 13th Missouri. In the history of each of these flags, there was material for volumes of history and romance. A heartfelt and tearful interest clustered around them: and though rent in shreds, discolored, soiled, and blood-stained, they lent a lustre to the walls upon which they hung. They were mementoes of the valor of our brave men in the field, fighting for the maintenance of right and justice against wrong and outrage. Silently, but powerfully, they appealed to the patriotism of the people to stand by the great cause of human freedom and self-government, in the conflict for which these banners had been proudly borne aloft. Nor was it forgotten, that thousands who had fought under them had laid down life in their defence, and are now sleeping "the sleep that knows no waking,"—no more to be saluted by friend, or assaulted by foe.

There were also flags captured from rebels in scores. One from the famous "Mississippi Devils," bearing the motto, "Our rights;" a Virginia flag, captured at Gettysburg, bearing on its folds "Dulce et decorum patriæ mori;" a Virginia State flag, the Rock Rifleman's flag; the flag of the Summit (Miss.) Rifles—"We fight for our rights"—presented by the ladies of Summit." Another flag was suggestive of Floyd. It bore the motto, "We collect our own revenue,"—and, it might have been added, that of others', too.

It would be impossible to describe in detail the contents of this hall. We can only specify the most noteworthy, en passant. A counter ran through the centre, covered with a motley collection of trophies captured from the rebels, including guns, scimitars, bowie knives of all shapes, butcher knives with most ferocious look, swords, balls, pistols, shells, camp stools, &c.—every one of which had a history. Among these trophies was a shackle, presented by Dr. H. P. Strong, of Beloit, Wis., taken from the ankle of a slave at Port Gibson, by the "Walsh Guards," 11th Wisconsin. It was made of bar iron, three inches wide, and half an inch thick, weighing between three and four pounds, and had been worn eleven months. Another trophy which challenged the attention, and aroused the indignation of all, was called a "Southern necklace," which had the following history: "While our army were at Grand Gulf, Miss., an intelligent contraband gave much valuable information as to the position of the enemy, and otherwise rendered himself very useful to our forces. He finally fell into the hands of the rebels, who administered one hundred and fifty lashes, and placed an iron collar round his neck, riveting it on very strongly. Afterwards the negro was captured from the rebels at Baton Rouge, La., by Company F., 4th Wisconsin, who, of course, immediately released him from the collar. The collar was a round rod of iron, two inches in circumference, riveted together before and behind with two iron prongs, one inch wide, three-fourths of an inch thick, and twelve inches long, rising from each side directly outside the ears."

There were beautiful specimens of gypsum work from Grand Rapids, Mich., made into cups, vases, paper weights, &c.; Indian work and curiosities from St. Paul, Minn., and Green Bay, Wis., the most noteworthy of which was "Hiawatha's Wigwam," made by Mrs. H. L. Baird; four boxes of exquisite algae (sea-plants) from N. J. Gilman, Portland, Me.; an exquisite herbarium, collected by Edward L. Green, of Co. H., 18th Wisconsin.

sin, while doing duty at Fort Donelson, Tenn., which was presented by Mrs. A. M. Greene, of Albion, Wis.; a very beautiful collection of lichens, tastefully arranged, and presented by Mrs. H. M. Baird, of Green Bay, Wis., Mrs. D. G. Goodale, Beloit, Wis., and Mrs. L. F. Hodges, Milwaukee. Fragments of rope, timber, &c., from the old historic frigate "Constitution," better known as "Old Ironsides," sent from Washington, as also fragments of the wrecks of the "Merrimac" and "Cumberland;" a silver band and three silver bracelets, in perfect preservation, taken from the brow and arm of a gigantic Indian skeleton, exhumed in Quincy, Ill., a few days previous to the Fair. One of the bracelets was marked with the word "Montreal," and the initials "R. G." The Indian warrior must have been entombed beside the "Father of Waters" one hundred years.

There was also a cross made from a piece of the "Charter Oak," heavily mounted with gold, given by Miss Charles Cairn, of Milwaukee, and two picture frames from the same memorable tree, donated by Gov. Holly, of Salisbury, Conn., through Mrs. Senator Trumbull. A tobacco box belonging to the immortal Puritan, John Alden, who came over in the "Mayflower" in 1620, and a copy of that rare work, the "Elliott Bible,"—the first printed in America,—both loaned for exhibition by Miss McFadden, of Pittsburg, herself a descendent of John Alden; and a unique volume entitled "The Rich Fool," printed two hundred and one years ago, presented to the Fair by Rev. John Gridley, Kenosha, Wis. Miss Kate Kennedy, a young lady from the Island of St. Helena, visiting in Chicago, enriched the Fair with a collection of views of the Island, and several relics associated with Napoleon's life at Longwood. Miss K. stated that the people of St. Helena, though far removed from the United States, heartily sympathized with the Federal Government in its conflict with treason. Senator Chandler, of Michigan, sent a very valuable donation through Mrs. Senator Trumbull—the Alpine staff used by Napoleon in crossing the Alps. Miss Jane Dousman, for twenty years a missionary to the Menominee Indians, presented a collection of Indian curiosities, with a history attached to each. Aquanama, the first chief of the Menominees, presented his own belt, made by his wife, and also his photograph. Emma Aquanama, his daughter, sent with the collection an Indian basket and three bags, made by herself. Here, too, were exhibited the Sewing Machines, of which there was every variety found in the West. Notwithstanding they are now no novelty, yet continual crowds gathered around them to witness the marvels of needle-work and embroidery, performed by the skilful operators with incredible rapidity.

There was also a fine collection of minerals, sent in charge of Rev. John Reynard, of Shellsburg, Wis., valued at $800 or $1000. It was the finest mineralogical collection ever brought to Chicago. To this gentleman, who is both an amateur and a connoisseur in the science of mineralogy, is due the credit of collecting, arranging and disposing of this handsome collection. Among them were hundreds of duplicates, rare and beautiful, which were eagerly sought after. A magnificent specimen of Galena iron pyrites and blende, in this collection, sold for $150; a large and beautifully arranged cabinet for $400; while a valuable miscellaneous collection was so divided as to make some dozens of small cabinets for schools, which found ready purchasers. The specimens were principally from Lafayette and Grant counties, Wis., and Jo Daviess county, Ill. A fine collection of Lake Superior iron, silver and copper, presented by Mrs. H. H. Greenough, of N. Y., who collected them in Marquette, Wis., did not arrive until the last day of the Fair, when they could not be properly arranged and appreciated. Many specimens, however, were sold after the Fair, at good prices and to appreciative parties.

We should weary our readers should we continue to enumerate and describe the contents of this hall. We have only mentioned the rarest of its collection of curiosities, which drew wondering crowds from the opening to the close of the Fair. It was a daily matter of regret that the hall was not larger: and could the extent of this department have been foreseen, and the interest it would have excited, some hall of larger capacity would have been provided. Every day, from early morning until late at night, it was plethoric with visitors; and the ladies who presided in this hall, ably assisted by Judge Bradwell and Rev. Mr. Reynard, daily talked themselves hoarse and weary, in reiterated explanations of their storied collection to the never-ceasing crowds of curiosity-seekers.

THE ART GALLERY.

Thanks to the generosity of J. H. McVicker, Esq., the patriotic manager of the Chicago Theatre, the best arranged and best lighted hall in the city was placed at the disposal of the Fair; for the Art Gallery, free of rent, and to be occupied as long as it might be needed for that purpose. To L. W. Volk, sculptor, the entire management of the gallery was committed. Partitions were run up between the large windows, dividing the spacious Hall into alcoves, both sides of which, as also the walls of the room, were covered with pictures. The inability to light the Hall from above was the only thing to be regretted in this beautiful room, and as the attendance was more numerous in the evening, when the pictures were flooded with gas-light, this objection was not a very serious one.

Lady canvassers waited upon the citizens, and obtained the loan of their pictures for exhibition in the gallery during the Fair. Very few declined, and the number of beautiful and rare works of art that were collected was a surprise to those who had not kept pace with the growth of Chicago in culture and refinement. Not a few of the pictures were sent from Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa, and some from Pittsburg. Many of the Chicago artists generously painted pictures for the occasion, which they afterwards donated, and which were sold at good prices.

Anything like an elaborate sketch of this Art Exposition is impossible in this pamphlet. There is neither space nor time, for young as is Chicago, over three hundred works of art were collected from her homes, most of which are deserving of more than a passing notice. Church was represented by two South American pictures, which reminded one of his magnificent "Heart of the Andes." They are bright and luminous, with dark pines, and brilliant tropical plants in the foreground, contrasting finely with the sunny valley, and the gorgeous sides of the mountains, whose peaks are glittering in mid-heaven with perpetual snow. Boutelle was represented by two forest scenes, one of which—"Scene in the Catskill"—is especially fresh and beautiful, full of natural touches, and inspirations of feeling and color. Of the works of Rossiter, his "America" and "Italy" received, and perhaps merited most attention. Two female figures symbolize the two countries: "America," with bright face, blue eyes, and waving hair, on which a star-besprinkled crown is resting, stands in the flooding light of the newly risen day, looking young, strong, brave and hopeful. "Italy," with dark hair, sad, down-cast eyes, and worn features, droops in a despairing and abandoned attitude, while the red twilight falls around her.

There were two pictures of Cranch, one of which, "Lake George," is especially in the author's style. The mountains brood over the lake, cold, dull and hoary—and the water looks as opaque as the mountains. Angeline Kauffman's companion pictures, "Comedy and Tragedy," were great attractions, as much from the renown of the artist, as from the pictures themselves. "A School Examination," by Hideman, pleased all. It was appreciable by even the most uncultured, and yet it possessed the humor and reality of Hogarth, with a fine display of coloring. The old village clergyman is examining the scholars of the village school, with a smile of infinite good humor irradiating his ruddy face, and a kind and fatherly look beaming in his eye. A boy, who is undergoing examination, has this problem to solve: "How many are five and three?" but poor stupidity cannot answer. The clerical examiner holds up three fingers of one hand and five of the other; but the booby boy is too scared by the august presence of the minister even to count. A row of children is brought up before the pedagogue, awed out of their senses, while a wee toddler, with his finger in his mouth, looks up at the great man of the village in admiration and surprise, which is very natural. Several of Hall's exquisite fruit pieces were on exhibition, one of which, "Raspberries," is so exceedingly natural as to mislead a little child of Mr. Volk's, the manager, who was carried from the Hall, crying for the tempting fruit. A higher compliment could not have been paid the artist.

"Stratton Gap," Manchester, Vt., by Durand; "Morning on Mt. Washington," "Lake Winnepiseogee," "Greenwood Lake," and others, by Cropsey, were excellent pictures of New England scenery, and possessed of great merit. One of Gifford's pictures, a "Scene on the Hudson," and one of Kensett's, "View on the Hudson," both exquisite little gems, were included in the Exposition. Culverhouse was represented by several pictures, two of which, a "Procession of Monks" and "Moonlight on the Scheldt," were very striking and beautiful. They were wholly unlike any other pictures in the Exhibition. Like most of his works, they were night-scenes, and one a skating scene. Nothing could be more admirably painted than the glary ice of the frozen river, and the swaying picturesque figures of the skaters gliding over its moonlit surface. Two companion pieces, by Dietrecy, "Italian Landscapes," were highly finished pictures in the artist's characteristic style. They did not immediately attract attention, but grew on one's regard, with study, which was necessary to their appreciation.

"A Sunset Scene," a small picture by Würst, was the object of especial admiration. Dark, heavy masses of trees rise from a little ravine in the foreground of this picture, at the bottom of which a silent river lies frozen in everlasting darkness, while huge rocks rise to the left. But the sunset sky, glowing with crimson and purple, flashes light and color into the depth of this death and darkness, tinting the ice of the ravine, and painting the rocks that frown above it. "A Scene on the Campagna," by Schreinfort; "Lake Nemi," by Pastina; a "View in Venice," by Canaletto; "View of Rome," by Tiltén, and a "View from the Hinter-see," by Leu, were also works of genius, which attracted crowds of appreciative admirers. The first three are Italian pictures, and by many, Canaletto's was considered the gem of the collection. There was also a landscape painted by Mrs. George M. Higginson (the daughter of Rev. Dr. Tyng), but it was hardly one of her best productions. Of works by the old masters, there were professedly paintings by Rembrandt, Van Harp, Sassaferato, Tintoretto, and several excellent copies of famous old pictures.

Many of Mr. Healy's best portraits were on the walls. The magnificent portrait of Dr. Orestes A. Brownson, one of the best which Healy has painted, and the glorious head and face of Longfellow, justly classed among the chefs d'œuvre of the artist, together with the beautiful picture of the late Archbishop of Baltimore, adorned the gallery. There were many other of Healy's portraits, all distinguished for their marvellous coloring, their finely finished touches, and conscientiousness of detail. Not one of them can be mentioned but in terms of praise.

The lady managers of the Fair were under great obligations to the young artists of Chicago—Antrobus, Drury, Ford, Fish, Reed, and Mrs. St. John, for their generous contributions to the Exposition. Many of their works evinced a high order of talent, which will in due time make them the pride of the North-West. Each donated of their works to the Fair, and like everything else offered for sale, their pictures sold rapidly and well.

The exhibition of statuary was small. All of Volk's works were out of the city, and he had only casts of his works to exhibit. There was an exquisite little statue of an "Infant sleeping in Roses," cut by Cacciatori, and a life-size statue of "Jephthah's Daughter," by Mosier, which had just arrived in Chicago, and was only opened on the first day of the Fair. A cast of Venus and Mercury by Thorwaldsen, several bronzes and medallions, made up all that was valuable in the collection of statuary.

Above the gallery was another hall devoted to photographs, water-colors and steel engravings, and a very creditable collection was brought together.

The success of the Exposition may be inferred from the fact that 25,000 persons visited the Gallery during the Fair, and that it was necessary to continue it two weeks longer to satisfy the demands of the public. On one day alone 1850 tickets were sold at the door, and 800 catalogues. During the first five days, 7000 catalogues were sold, and the profits from this sale alone were sufficient to defray all the expenses of the Exposition.

The interest of the Gallery was very much increased by the constant attendance of Mrs. J. S. Colt, of Milwaukee, who presided in this Hall, assisted by several of the most attractive and cultivated ladies of the North-West. To the uninitiated, and those not familiar with pictures, they gave information in so pleasant and agreeable a manner, that their services were in continual requisition throughout the Fair. One of Chickering's Pianos was in the Hall, and music was one of the accessories of the occasion—some one of the many amateur musicians in attendance being always ready to obey the summons to the piano. To all, their attentions were delicate and grateful, and we doubt if any one will remember the Exposition, without linking with it the bright and agreeable ladies who did so much to render pleasant a visit to the Art Gallery.

METROPOLITAN HALL.

Metropolitan Hall was devoted exclusively to evening entertainments, and was not opened in the day time. Its decorations were exceedingly beautiful, and such as lighted up brilliantly in the evening. Festoons of red, white and blue, glittering with gold stars depended from the gallery, every iron column was fluted with white and red, while around the gallery were arranged mottoes expressive of faith in God, devotion to the country, and undying interest in her brave defenders. The proscenium was gorgeously arranged with fluted decorations and festoons of the national colors. At either side of the stage were busts of President Lincoln and Webster, while over the curtain hovered the national eagle, resting on a shield, grasping the stars and stripes in the talons of one foot, and the arrowy lightnings with the other.

To Mrs. D. P. Livermore, the management of the evening entertainments was given, who catered to the amusement of the crowd during the evenings of the Fair, providing a new entertainment every night—and every night the spacious hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. On the first evening of the Fair, the Hall was occupied by

THE CHILDRENS' CONCERT.

The stage was completely filled by the little people, two hundred in number, who were dressed in white, and crowned with flowers. They were arranged in rows, each row being raised a step above that in front of it—the wee little toddlers in front, and the larger children behind. A murmur of admiration ran through the audience when the curtain rose and disclosed the radiant, happy little minstrels, and never did a prettier sight greet the eye than this pyramid of human buds and blossoms. The songs were largely patriotic, and were rendered with a spirit which told how the childrens' hearts were in them. Almost every piece was encored, and the obliging little creatures repeated song after song, only too happy to give happiness to their enraptured auditors. In the closing song the children displayed tiny flags, which they waved in the chorus, in perfect time with the melody, raising the enthusiasm of the delighted audience to such a pitch, that the entire house rose to their feet, and gave three cheers for the little song-birds. The children acknowledged the compliment by throwing kisses with both little hands, and the curtain fell on the happiest and prettiest bevy of performers that ever occupied a stage.

To Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Dye, of Chicago, is due the credit of the musical perfection of the entertainment. To their patience in the instruction of the children, their taste in arranging the programme, and to their musical skill, the success of the concert was mainly owing.

On the second evening of the Fair, the entertainment consisted of

AN EXHIBITION OF TABLEAUX.

This exhibition was gotten up by the ladies and gentlemen of Chicago, under the management of Hon. S. M. Wilson. The tableaux were allegorical, statuary and classical, and all were exhibited on a revolving platform, so that each tableau was seen from all points. "The Power of Gold" was a fine allegorical tableau. Elevated above the groups that formed the picture, and hovering and brooding over them, was a glittering presence, radiant with gems and gold, which seemed the very impersonation of the precious metal. Below was one group, representing the wedding of a rich old man with a reluctant but beautiful young bride. There were gorgeousness of dress and appointments in the bridal group, but the decrepitude and snows of many winters were on the brow of the venerable bridegroom, whose money had won the beautiful girl beside him.

Another group beneath the shadowing presence of the "Gold Power," was a miser counting his gains from an iron-bound coffer, while behind him a robber crouched with uplifted knife, which the next moment would drink his heart's blood. "Night and "Morning," "Dream of Arcadia," "Union and Disunion," were other allegorical tableaux, equally well arranged, and full of significance. "The Roman Wrestlers," and "The Death of Abel," were fine statuary tableaux.

These beautiful living pictures were interspersed with music. Miss Georgia Dean, the well-known harpist, sang several exquisite songs with a harp accompaniment, and the Misses Dwight assisted still farther to relieve the tedium of waiting between the scenes, with two or three duets, sang very sweetly.

The evening following, there was a

SECOND EXHIBITION OF TABLEAUX.

Chicago audiences never weary of tableaux. Although there had been a crowded house the evening previous, yet the announcement of a second exhibition of tableaux, to be given by ladies of Detroit, again filled Metropolitan Hall to suffocation. Miss Sibley, of Detroit, one of the Committee on Evening Entertainments, very generously proffered an exhibition of tableaux by the ladies of her city—they to bear all the expense incident to preparation, costumes, the journey to Chicago, hotel bills, &c., and the Fair to reap all the profits of the entertainment. Of course, so generous a proposition was gratefully accepted. It was by far the most attractive entertainment of the kind ever given in Chicago. We have not room for a particular description of these exquisite pictures, but for magnificence of costume, artistic groupings and startling effects, we have never seen them surpassed—rarely equalled, even when arranged by professional artists.

"Joseph's brethren bringing the coat to Jacob," "Queen Katharine's Vision," "Expulsion of Hagar," "Return of Jephthah," "Execution of Beatrice Cenci," "Prison Scene from Faust," "Richard Cœur de Leon's Vow at Askelon," and "Jephthah's Daughter parting with her Maidens," were all of them striking and beautiful. Each one was encored, and each was shown two and three times over. "A Monastic Procession" was a moving tableau. A company of nuns and priests, the former in white robes, and the latter in dark gowns, all bearing torches, filed slowly through the corridors and arches of a monastery at midnight, chanting clearly and sweetly Miserere from Il Trovatore. The sound of their voices increased in strength and fulness as they approached the audience, and died away as they receded farther and farther.

"Bluebeard" was of another character. The five unfortunate victims of misplaced confidence, clad in grave-clothes, were seen hanging by the neck, dead, dead, dead! their innocent white faces all drooping in one direction, and the tips of their toes just touching the ground. Fatima, arrayed in the most brilliant attire, and sparkling with jewels, has blundered into this chamber of death, and stands aghast at the terrible spectacle.

Richard Storrs Willis, Esq., known as one of the first composers and pianists of the country, with Mrs. Willis, accompanied the Detroit party to Chicago. He had led out Mrs. Willis between the scenes, who sang

Il Baccio in a manner that elicited hearty applause, when she sang, as an encore, Piccolomini Waltz, charming the audience with the sweetness of her vocalization, and her grace of manner. A still greater pleasure was in store in the closing tableau. The Goddess of Liberty, in a bodice formed of the Union, and a skirt of the stars and stripes, wearing the liberty cap, and holding the flag in her hand, stood in the central foreground. At her left was a U. S. army officer, and a group of jolly tars in their naval uniform, while in a semi-circle back were ranged the three graces—Faith, Hope, and Charity. Suddenly, the Goddess, Mrs. Willis, broke forth with the "Anthem of Liberty," both the music and words of which were composed by Mr. Willis:

"Anthem of Liberty, solemn and grand,
Wake in thy loftiness, sweep thro' the land!
Light in each breast anew patriot fires!
Pledge the old flag again—flag of our sires!
Fling all thy folds abroad, banner of light!
Onward, still onward, flag of our might!
Onward, victorious! God for the right!
Amen! Amen!"

The chorus was joined in by all the group, and was grand and inspiring. The effect was electrical: the immense audience rose to their feet, and the curtain fell amid tumultuous cheers and applause. Again it rose, and again the Goddess of Liberty, as if inspired anew with patriotic fervor, sang the "Star Spangled Banner," the whole party joining in the chorus, accompanied by the Light Guard Band, and half the assembly. When the curtain again fell, the enthusiastic audience gave three hearty cheers for the ladies of Detroit, to whom they were indebted for so pleasant an evening.

The net proceeds of the entertainment were in the neighborhood of $800, but the amount of pleasure it conferred cannot be estimated. The patriotic generosity of the ladies and gentlemen of Detroit will never be forgotten by Chicago, nor the Northwest, and among the pleasant memories of the Fair, this evening will ever hold a prominent place.

The evening following, a grand vocal and instrumental Concert was given, under the management of Balatka, whose name alone is a significant testimonial to its excellence. At the Concert, the very best musical talent of Chicago assisted. Mrs. H. Miller, Miss Annie Main, Mr. R. Sabin, Mr. J. Lombard, and the male chorus of the Musical Union, were secured for the vocal part. The distinguished Pianist, Mr. H. Paling, and the celebrated Violinist, Mr. Lewis, were also in attendance. Despite a pouring rain, a large and delighted audience were in attendance. Mrs. Anna Newlin, of Philadelphia, gave dramatic readings and recitations the evening succeeding, and on Monday evening of the next week, a Promenade Concert continued the unbroken series of evening entertainments.

On Tuesday evening another Exhibition of Tableaux was called for, and given, under the management of Hon. S. M. Wilson. They were fully equal to those which had been previously put upon the stage, and the enjoyment of the evening was heightened by the presence of the "Rice Quartette," of Adrian, Mich., who volunteered their services for the occasion. All the intervals of waiting between the scenes were filled by these artists, with exquisite gems of song—quartettes, duets and solos.

ANNA DICKINSON'S LECTURES.

After that came Anna Dickinson's two lectures. How shall we do justice to them and to her? The fervor, the impassioned manner, the wonderful oratory, the astonishing memory of political and national events exhibited in her lectures took the entire community by surprise. The lectures were not so remarkable for originality, or logic, or argument, as for the magnetic power with which they were delivered. With a fearful array of inexorable facts, she exposed the subterfuges of those who planned the rebellion at the South, and who defended it at the North; and with the majesty of a second Joan d'Arc, she invoked the loyalty, the patriotism, and the religion of the North to aid in putting it down. It was a wonderful sight. A young girl of not more than twenty summers, graceful, beautiful and bewitching, holding an immense audience spell-bound by her eloquence, now melting them to tears and sobs by the infinite pathos of her voice and of her pleadings—and now dilating with noble indignation, and uttering scorching denunciation of the vile enemies of the country, whether fighting against our armies at the South, or more meanly plotting treason at home—sometimes pacing the stage back and forth as nonchalantly as in her own parlor, and then suddenly stopping to confront the enemies of the country with a mountain of damning facts and accusations, which she hurled in their faces, as a goddess might launch thunderbolts—she seemed a wonder, evoked by the emergencies of the day. In private life, all forgot the lecturer—the Pythoness—the Cassandra of the rostrum—and saw only a bright, vivacious girl, truly womanly, but wonderfully self-poised, quick at repartee, warm-hearted, and keenly alive to all that is noble and grand.

The rush to Miss Dickinson's lectures was immense. Tickets of admission were placed at $1.00 each, without extra charge for reserved seats—and before noon of each day there was not a good seat in the Hall unsold. Every inch of standing room was occupied, and even the entrances were besieged by eager crowds, that could not gain admittance, but that hung about the door, straining eyes and ears to see and hear the wonderful girl lecturer. The lectures finished—the audiences refused to be dismissed, and remained seated, cheering enthusiastically, and, like Oliver Twist, entreating for "more" of the rare oratory which had held them entranced for an hour. Only by pleading fatigue, and calling attention to her evident and painful hoarseness, were the insatiable audiences persuaded to excuse Miss Dickinson from farther effort.

The disloyal Press throughout the country have made this visit of Miss Dickinson to Chicago, and the sum paid for her lectures on this occasion, the subject of much unhandsome and unjust comment. A word in explanation may not be inappropriate here. The managers of the Fair did not solicit Miss Dickinson's services until her engagements for the winter season were already completed, when she immediately declined their invitation, on the reasonable plea of preengagement. The desire to have her connected with the Fair was general throughout the Northwest: the managers were besought to obtain her services at any price. She was again appealed to, and the managers entreated her to postpone or relinquish any engagements which would interfere with her attendance at the Fair during the second week, and promised to indemnify her for any loss she might thereby sustain. Not only was she addressed by the managers of the Fair to this effect, but by various other parties in the Northwest, who foresaw that her lectures and her presence would form one of the greatest attractions of those weeks. Finally, she consented, and pleading the interests of the great Soldiers' Fair, which was organized and being carried on by women, she broke her engagements for ten consecutive evenings, for which she had been promised $100 each, and placed herself at the service of the Fair, during its second week. She lectured two evenings of that week to crowded houses, and delivered an address on the afternoon of the last day, to a concourse equally as great—and for these, and other services, the managers paid her $600, her personal expenses being defrayed by herself. After paying this sum, and all other expenses connected with the lectures—rent of hall, advertising, printing, &c., the Fair netted from $1,200 to $1,300 from Miss Dickinson's services, while no computation can be made of the good she accomplished, and the gratification she afforded. The ladies connected with the Fair were more than satisfied with their arrangement with Miss Dickinson, and under similar circumstances would gladly repeat their action.

DINNER TO THE GOVERNORS, SENATORS, &c.

Sandwiched between Miss Dickinson's two brilliant lectures was an evening devoted to speech-making by the Governors, Senators, such distinguished military men as chanced to be home on furlough, and other magnates of the Northwest. They were invited to dine with the ladies in Lower Bryan Hall on Thursday, November 5th, and to deliver addresses afterwards, on the great topics and issues of the day, at Metropolitan Hall. The dinner hour was appointed at 6 P. M., and thus it did not interfere with the regular daily dinners which were given from 12 M. to 4 P. M., in the same Hall.

The invited guests, about two hundred in number, met at the parlors of the Tremont House, and after half an hour of social converse, repaired to the Dining Hall, where the most complete arrangements were made for their reception and entertainment. The decorations of the Hall had been re-arranged for the occasion with some additional attractions. Two ladies presided at each table, and the young lady-waiters served, as at the daily dinners, having substituted for the white caps and aprons of the day, a blue peasant's waist, skirt of the stripes of the flag, and a jaunty little red cap, trimmed with gold braid. Hon. Mark Skinner, President of the Northwestern Sanitary Commission, presided, and Rev. Dr. Patton said grace, when an assault was made on the elegantly set tables, which were speedily dismantled, and their formidable proportions reduced by the vigor of the attacking party.

During dinner, a photographic album, containing portraits of the Norwich boys, soldiers of Connecticut, was presented by the ladies of Connecticut to Governor Salomon, of Wisconsin, through Mrs. Edward C. Henshaw, of Ottawa, who presided over the Connecticut Department, by right of birth and education in that State. A portrait of Gov. Buckingham, of Conn., was presented to Gov. Yates, by the same ladies, in admiration of his statesmanship and patriotism. In the absence of Governor Yates, Hon. I. N. Arnold of Ill., took charge of its delivery. Accompanying the portrait was a sketch of Yantic Falls, set in beautiful autumnal leaves gathered from Putnam's "Wolf Den." Several members of the Chicago Board of Trade, who were among the guests, signified their approbation of the manner in which the whole affair was gotten up, by donating through their Secretary, Mr. Beatty, the sum of $200.

The guests then adjourned to Metropolitan Hall, where spirited addresses were made by Govs. Lewis and Salomon, of Wis., Hon. Matt. Carpenter, of Wis., Hon. Galusha Grow, of Penn., Hon. O. H. Lovejoy, of Ill., and others.

A SECOND FARMERS' PROCESSION.

The great feature of this day was the Farmers' Procession of loaded wagons of vegetables, which came in from the townships of Antioch, Blue Island, Calumet and Jefferson. There were between seventy and eighty in all. One would have supposed on this day that the Fair had just commenced. The streets were thronged with people, as on the opening day of the Fair. Thousands of strangers were in the city from all directions, the Halls were overflowing, the capacity of the hotels was tested to the utmost, and still there were hundreds who would have been without accommodation, but for the exertions of the ladies, who obtained for them the hospitalities of their friends and acquaintances. The procession of wagons paraded through the principal streets, thousands of men cheering it as it passed, and thousands of ladies waving their handkerchiefs at the welcome sight. Like the former one, it proceeded to the rooms of the Sanitary Commission, and there the wagons unloaded, and then, on the invitation of the ladies, proceeded to Bryan Hall to dine. Peter Page, Esq., of Chicago, was the orator of the occasion, and in a touching and truly eloquent speech, presented to the ladies the produce of the farmers, to which Mr. Seelye, Secretary of the Commission, as happily responded. Another speech was made by M. N. Kimball, Esq., of Jefferson, Ill., dinner was served, toasts were given, and then with three cheers for the Fair, and three more for the lady managers, the pleasant occasion ended.

ZOUAVE EXHIBITION DRILL.

On the evening of this same day, the Ellsworth Zouaves, whose fame for perfection of military drill is unique, extensive and well merited, and who desired to add to the receipts of the Fair, gave an exhibition drill for its benefit at their Armory. Notwithstanding the other attractions of the day and evening, their hall was filled, mostly by an audience from the country, to whom this drill was a novelty and delight. The ladies of the Fair were greatly gratified by the generosity and patriotism of these young men, whose general uprightness and generous instincts have made them universal favorites. The net receipts of this entertainment were about $140.

THE LAST DAY OF THE FAIR.

This sketch of the Fair would be incomplete without a brief mention of the last day, to all connected, the most interesting day of all. It was decided to give a grand dinner on that day to all the soldiers in Camp Douglas, the Marine and City Hospitals, and the Soldiers' Home. This was to take the place of the regular daily dinner. There were about six hundred in all, able to be present, and many others too feeble for the excitement, who remained behind. Public announcement of this intention having been made, donations of refreshments of the most exquisite character—rare fruit, ices, jellies, game and ornaments for the table—were sent to the Hall in great profusion. Such a furore of preparation as that morning witnessed! Fresh, spotless table linen was sent for—ladies ran hither and thither, rifling hot-houses of their flowers, plate-chests of their silver, and hunting and devising patriotic ornaments—the best Band in the city was summoned—the Hall was re-decorated, and made more attractive than ever—the pretty waiter girls made their toilets anew, and took their places behind the chairs, each as radiant as Hebe, and Anna Dickinson was engaged to utter the words of cheer, and praise and kindly remembrance that dilated the heart, and quivered on the lips of every woman in attendance. It seemed as if all the ladies felt that it was not possible to do enough to welcome and honor the brave fellows they had invited to dine with them. A more beautifully laid table was never seen; it far surpassed in elegance and sumptuousness that set for the dignitaries of the Northwest the day before, and the Hall glowed and glittered with the most beautiful of the combined decorations of the six Halls.

At twelve o'clock precisely, all being in readiness, the doors were opened, and the dear guests of the day marched into the Hall—a bronzed, scarred, emaciated, halt, blind, deaf, crippled, skeleton corps, some without arms, some without legs, some swinging themselves painfully on crutches, and some leaning feebly on those stronger than themselves, all bearing with them touching evidences that they had suffered for their country. "Brave boys are they!" crashed the Band; the ladies waved flags and handkerchiefs, and, according to the programme they had marked out for themselves, essayed a cheer, which was drowned in sobs, as they beheld the poor boys who were their guests. Slowly they were seated at table, and then with eyes humid with tears, and voice quivering with emotion, Anna Dickinson—the fair young girl—the noble woman—the eloquent orator—rose above them, and addressed them, in substance, as follows :

“I have not come here to-day to make a speech, but simply as an American woman, out of a full heart, and with trembling lips, to thank you. Looking around upon you, and remembering how different in this crisis of our country's peril has been your conduct from that of a multitude of others,—remembering how other men have stayed at home—some of them, perhaps, because they could not go to the war, others careless and indifferent, others with hearts full of curses against the cause of our country,—remembering this, I thank you; and pray God to bless you. The future will do you more justice, and better honor than the present, and history will blazon your names upon its records for ever, as the grandest heroes of this grandest and most memorable time.

“Soldiers, you are contending not merely for the Government of the United States, for the Union, for the maintenance of any particular form of political institutions, but for the freedom of the world. That is the immense stake for which you are fighting. You stand as the embodiment of democracy and liberty against the serried hosts of despotism. Brave boys from across the water—sons of Scotland and Ireland, Germans and Scandinavians, recognize the fact that you are not fighting simply for the Government of the United States. Remember how your friends from across the water are looking with mournful, solemn, but hopeful sympathy at the progress of the great struggle in which you are taking so noble a part. Remember how their hopes and interests are bound up with yours in the great cause for which you are pouring out your blood.

“And for you, Americans—my own countrymen—brave boys, struggling here for this, your own native land, you are not only emulating the deeds of your revolutionary fathers, but you are fighting in a cause, if possible, more glorious than that which stirred their blood to deeds of lofty daring. This, our country's second revolution, is of wider scope, and involves loftier principles than the first.

“Some of you, young men, standing here, are not as you were with us months ago—full of life, and hope, and energy. You have come back to us, broken and shattered, maimed and helpless. ‘But what of that,’ said a soldier, who had been wounded in one of Napoleon's great battles, when the surgeon was feeling for a bullet which had almost reached his heart, ‘put your probe in a little deeper, and you will find Napoleon.’ And the bullets that have gone crushing through the ranks of our brave boys, on the bloody fields of the South, have reached breasts so full of patriotism, that wounds, limbs, life itself were but trifles, when weighed in the scale against their country.

“Some of you, alas! have come back to us blinded, with the beautiful light of heaven shut out from you forever, but it has been that the glorious light of justice might shine throughout the length and breadth of the land. What can I say to you, save that coming back to us, halt, and maimed, and blind, the great loyal heart of the nation springs up to meet you, and to love you. Some of you may be going back again to renew your noble exertions in our great cause, to suffer, and, it may be, to die for it. If there be any such here, looking in your faces, I repeat, we thank you. Should it be the lot of any of you to return to us no more—should your life ebb on some distant battle-field, where no woman's hand can smooth your dying pillow, and no friendly ear receive your parting sigh—still even there our love and affection shall follow you. You shall have immortal crowning, and the world shall honor your graves!"

Grace was then said by Rev. E. B. Tuttle, Chaplain of Camp Douglas, and the waiters darted off for soup, fish, turkey, game, vegetables, pies, puddings, ices, tea, coffee—anything which was called for. The poor fellows were waited on as dear brothers and sons would have been just "home from the war," and their not over-vigorous appetites were coaxed and catered to, as though feasting were the supremest joy of life. Dinner was soon over, and then came the "after dinner" talk. Chaplain Day, of the 8th Ill. Infantry, now on detached service for the Sanitary Commission, who was present, made a brief address, which stirred the boys to the very depths, and then followed a speech from Lieut. Col. Beadle, of the Michigan Sharp Shooters. "Three cheers for Abraham Lincoln, a diamond in the rough!" proposed a manly voice, and a mighty cheer thundered through the hall. Then "three cheers for the ladies of the Northwestern Fair," shook the hall again, to which the ladies in their enthusiasm responded, by "three cheers for the soldiers," given with an accompaniment by the band, and with the waving of flags and handkerchiefs. Chaplain Day then proposed that the boys should give the ladies a specimen of their battle-cry, as they charge double-quick on the enemy—and, unconsciously to themselves, they took the attitude, and their faces assumed the determination of the charge, and such a prolonged, unearthly, terrific yell followed, as beggars description. We can imagine its power on the battle-field. "It was enough," said one of the ladies, when speaking of it afterwards, "to have scared every copperhead out of the city."

The excitement was now at a white heat, and there was no vent to it but in music. The band struck up "The Red, White and Blue," when the boys joined in rousingly with their bass and tenor, and the ladies added soprano and contralto, and for the next hour all sang together, till the entire repertoire of patriotic and soldier songs, was exhausted. "Let us not forget our dead," said Chaplain Day—"they who went out with us to the conflict, but whose slumbers on the battle-field shall not again be broken until the revells of the resurrection morn shall awake them. Let us remember, that

"He who for country dies, dies not—
But LIVETH evermore!"

And all stood in solemn silence with uncovered heads, while the band wailed forth a dirge for those to whom God had granted a discharge from the conflict, and promoted to the ranks of the crowned Immortals. A doxology was the fitting close to the hour, and a thousand or more of voices joined in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," to grand Old Hundred—and then, with swelling hearts, and quivering voices, and sonorous claspings of the hand, and broken words of thanksgiving, the boys slowly took their departure. "Oh, we are not worthy of this," they said, "we have not earned such kindness—but on our next battle-field, the memory of this day shall make us braver and stronger."

Is there but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous? We hesitate to give the finale, but as a faithful historian we must tell the truth. "This is the soldiers' day," said a practical woman at the door, as the boys were making their exit, "and let's crowd all the good things into it that we can. Run, John, and bring some boxes of fine cigars!" A moment's delay, and the cigars came; and then to all were given as they went out, cigars and matches, and the head of each was surrounded, as he left the room, with an aureola of smoke, if not of glory. Do not frown anti-tobacconists! Let the boys smoke if they will—their comforts are not many, and their luxuries are even rarer.

To those whose feebleness detained them in the hospitals, baskets of such delicate and tempting viands were sent, as the surgeons endorsed, committees of ladies accompanying them, and serving them in person. They even spent the larger part of the day in the hospitals, helping the poor fellows make merry on this their gala-day.

Now followed a rich scene. Two hundred gentlemen from the business circles of the city came in as the "boys" went out, volunteering to serve as waiters to the ladies while they dined. The offer was accepted. The ladies doffed their white aprons and caps, and the gentlemen begged them to retire to the Upper Hall, while they reset the tables and prepared the dinner. The request was complied with, and at a given signal the ladies returned to find the gentlemen grotesquely attired in their serving-gear, the uniform of white aprons and caps, while the motley condition of the tables gave evidence of the handiwork of men. Who that partook of that dinner will ever forget it? Happy she who did not receive a baptism of oyster soup and coffee, as the waiters ran hither and thither, like men demented, colliding with each other, to the great damage of tureens and coffee urns, and the infinite bespattering of the fair ones waited on. We saw one editor of the city industriously peddling tooth-picks, and that before the soup was removed—and another presiding at a coffee urn, so intent on a harmless flirtation with his next neighbor, that he forgot to stop the flow of coffee when the first cup was filled, and was not reminded of it, till the urn was emptied on the floor, and a river of coffee was running under the table, among the feet of the ladies.

For an hour, fun and frolic held high carnival. Shout after shout of laughter pealed forth from the merry girls at the contresens of their servants: now and then came a little shriek, at a smash of crockery or an upset of coffee; faster and faster ran around the awkward waiters, until at last the be-capped and be-aproned masculine attendants gave up in utter despair, declaring themselves "completely tuckered out," and begged the ladies to help themselves to anything they liked through the rest of the dinner.

Immediately after this dinner, and as soon the gentlemen had departed, the lady managers held an informal meeting in the Dining Hall, where a series of resolutions were offered by the Connecticut Delegation, and which, on motion, were made the unanimous expression of all present.

WHEREAS, Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. P. Livermore, have, by their untiring zeal, industry and effort, successfully inaugurated, conducted and concluded the great Northwestern Fair; and

WHEREAS, Those ladies have been subjected to many personal trials and difficulties in the prosecution of their noble work for the soldiers, therefore,

Resolved,—That we, the Ladies of the Connecticut Department of the Northwestern Fair, wish to express our high sense of the invaluable services of Mrs. A. H. Hoge and Mrs. D. P. Livermore, in the cause so dear to us all, and to thank them in particular for the ability, skill and success with which they have conducted the Northwestern Fair to a triumphant conclusion.

Resolved,—That this Fair has been an unparalleled success—not merely in a pecuniary point of view, but as a great uprising of the women of the Northwest, in signification of their devotion to the cause of our beloved and imperiled country.

Resolved,—That we offer our thanks also to Mrs. O. E. Hosmer and Mrs. W. E. Franklin, for the admirable and courteous manner in which they have discharged the laborious and difficult duties devolving upon them, as Superintendents of the Dining Hall of the Northwestern Fair.

Resolved,—That in view of the unanimity with which the Northwestern States have combined, in this Fair, we request that the name of the Chicago Sanitary Commission shall now and henceforth be "Northwestern Sanitary Commission, Branch of the United States Sanitary Commission."

Resolved,—That we send greeting, to all in the Federal service, whether in field or in hospital—whether in army or navy—of whatever State or birth-place—and desire to remind them that in thus coming forward to fill the Treasury of the United States Sanitary Commission, which Commission succors all without distinction who come within its beneficial range, we are offering sympathy and support to every individual of our country's defenders.

Resolved,—That inasmuch as no amount of money will purchase the indispensable garments which are made only by the women of our patriotic organizations, we will return home to set the machinery of our Aid Societies in still more active operation, and that we will continue our efforts and our work, not only as long as the war continues, but as long as there is hospital to supply, or a soldier to succor.

In the evening, not satisfied with the fun of the afternoon, the young people cleared away the booths, and wound up the Fair with a dance, that closed as the clock struck eleven. At the same time, the German ladies gave a grand ball at Metropolitan Hall, which was largely attended, and in pecuniary sense was a great success.

And so ended the Northwestern Fair, for whose success the brave, suffering soldiers may well "thank God and take courage."

"THE VOLUNTEER."

This was the title of the daily evening paper published for the Fair. It was the original intention of the Ladies to have this edited and conducted by a committee selected from among themselves; but, as the Fair progressed the labor increased, and those ladies to whom the management of the paper was to have been committed, were so over-burdened with work, that they could do no more than exercise a general supervision over it.

Frank D. Carley, Esq., very generously proffered his assistance to the ladies in their dilemma, and although without previous experience in matters of this kind, and constantly pressed into the Fair in other directions, he succeeded in bringing out a very creditable little daily journal, which was eagerly sought. If it did no more, it faithfully chronicled the most notable events that occurred during each day in the several halls, and announced the wants, and plans, and expectations of the day following. The papers sold readily at five cents apiece. Young girls acted the role of newsboys in every hall, and cried their papers so charmingly that they were overwhelmed with customers. The entire edition of each day was sold in an hour or two after it was printed, and those who deferred making a collection of the series till the close of the Fair, found that no more were then to be had.

Great praise is due Mr. Carley for his help in this department. And not in this department alone, for he placed himself at the service of the ladies throughout the Fair, and was indefatigable and almost ubiquitous. The entire corps of managers gratefully realize their numerous obligations to him. The net receipts of "The Volunteer" were between $300 and $400.

AUCTION SALES ON THE SIDEWALK.

Among other donations for which the ladies were unprepared, was that of live stock. A thorough-bred colt, worth $60, was given by Edward Simonds, of Jefferson, Ill.; a two year old Morgan colt, worth $75 was given by S. A. Abbott; two pet bears, formerly owned by "Little Crow," the Indian chief, were sent by E. H. Craig, of Fort Snelling, Minn.; a horse, worth $100, by Wm. Carron; Durham cattle by other parties; a yearling colt, worth $100, by Wm. Weeks; and M. N. Kimball, of Jefferson, Ill., gave a fat, stall-fed ox, which weighed, when dressed, 1800 pounds. There were several other gifts of the same kind, of which our space forbids mention.

As these donations were received, advertisements of the same were inserted in the daily papers, and a day and hour appointed for their sale at auction, on the sidewalk in front of Bryan Hall. A crowd always collected, and spirited bidding ensued, which resulted in the sale of most of the live stock during the Fair.

ITEMS AND INCIDENTS.

Several incidents which have come to our knowledge in connection with the Fair, are worthy of record, and cannot fail to be interesting in this connection. We give a few, and only regret that our limits compel us to omit many others that are exceedingly touching.

In one of the South-western hospitals there died a young soldier, whose home was in Chicago, leaving an only sister to mourn the loss of his strong arm and brave heart, which were necessary to her in the fierce battle of life. After his death, there was found in his pockets a small sum of money—his all of worldly wealth. His sister felt that the money was too sacred to be applied to daily uses; so she purchased with it a quantity of bright and soft zephyr worsted, out of which she knit, with her own hands, a beautiful Afghan—memories of him who died dimming her eyes and saddening her heart, as she patiently wrought—and when it was completed, she brought it to the Fair and modestly donated it to the cause of the sick and suffering soldier. It was an article of exquisite beauty, and was hung in a conspicuous place, where it attracted general attention, and was sold at an early day for $100. Who can compute the good accomplished by the few dollars found in the dead soldier's pocket!

One of the contrabands who accompanied Dr. Todd from Montgomery, Alabama, brought an offering to the Fair, and, presenting it to the Secretary, asked, "Please, missus, may dis sheet, what I got wid my own money and stitched wid my own hands, be sold for de Union sojers?" and she held forth a large bleached cotton sheet, as neatly made as any one could make it. She was very comely, although black, and gave her history, briefly, as follows: "I was raised in Jones County, Alabama; I'se fifty years old, missus; I'se left nine chil'en in de land ob bondage. Ten o' my lambs de great Lord's took, and dey's gone home to glory." Out of twenty children, she has possession of but one. Her simple story, so touchingly narrated, caused a speedy sale of her offering, which brought much more than its actual value.

One of the ladies of the Fair was called to the door of Bryan Hall by the door-keeper, with the statement "that an old man out at the ticket office wanted to see her, but did not want to come in." She immediately obeyed the summons, and there found a venerable, white-haired old man, about eighty years old, and bowed with infirmity. He said, "My wife and I are very poor—we had two sons—they both went into the army—one was killed on the 'Hatchie, and the other is still in the service—we want to do something for this Fair, but it is so little that we can do, that we are ashamed to propose it." On being assured that the smallest gifts were acceptable, he continued, "We have a few chickens, and if they will do you any good, I will kill four, and bring them to-morrow, all cooked. My wife who, old as she is, is a good cook, will dress them, and roast them herself."

Tickets of admission for himself and wife were given him, and grateful and kind words from the warm heart of the lady made his withered face to glow with pleasure, albeit his eyes were dim with tears. The next day, at dinner time, he came again, with the nicely roasted fowls in a basket, covered with a snowy napkin. "I wish, lady," he said, "that my gift was a thousand times more valuable, but it is all I have."

An elderly woman, a German, with toil-hardened hands, came up to the managers, and in broken English, told her story. She was a widow, with two sons, one in the army, and the other a mere lad, whom she supported with herself by taking in washing. She wanted to do something, but she could only spare fifty cents, and "would the ladies please accept that?"

Soldiers were admitted free of charge to every department of the Fair, and if their families were poor, they were also included in the free list.

A brave fellow from Chickamauga, who had lain for weeks in the hospital, came home to Illinois to recover his health, and heal his wounded and almost lost limb. His wife had come from her country home to Chicago, to meet him, and to help him complete his journey. He said to her, "Mary, I must go to that Fair, if it takes my last dollar. I think I have one left." With the help of his wife, and his crutches, he entered the bazaar, and, as he said, "was dazzled with its brightness, and carried away with its enthusiasm." It was an amazing contrast to the battle-field, hospitals, and barracks he had left behind. The glittering pagoda in the centre of Bryan Hall attracted him, as it did every one. An elegant cake basket was being sold in eighteen shares, at one dollar a share. "I'll take a chance for you, Mary," said the wounded hero, and a half shadow fell over the face of his wife, as she saw his last dollar go. The shares were all sold—the drawing commenced, and to our wounded brave from Chickamauga was delivered the cake basket. Such delight as there was over the good luck of the wounded soldier! "I thought the ladies would have carried me on their shoulders, when my name was called as the lucky one," said the happy fellow afterwards, when telling the story, "they were so glad I drew the cake basket—God bless 'em!"

Among the many rare and curious articles sent to the Fair was a package of silk worms' eggs, sent by the wife of a missionary—Rev. Mrs. Isaiah L. Hauser, from Bijour, nine hundred miles inland, N. W. from Calcutta, in the celebrated Rohilcund district, made remarkable by the dark deeds of Nena Sahib in rebellion.

They were donated through Rev. Dr. Eddy, of the N. W. Christian Advocate. The eggs were sent in a letter, with a skein of floss of Mrs. Hauser's own raising. Mrs. Hauser, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd, of Kenosha, is connected with the Methodist Mission, and these silkworms' eggs, and the silk floss in which they were enveloped, were from her own silk-growing establishment, carried on to give employment to the orphans in the care of the mission. The tiny eggs were examined by a large number of the curious, and at last were disposed of to a gentleman who promised, if successful in their culture, to make the fact known.

From Como, Ill., five barrels of potatoes were sent, raised for the soldiers by half a dozen young ladies exclusively, who planted, hoed and dug them. "May your Fair be prospered!" was the benediction accompanying them. "Our efforts are feeble, but we remember our brave soldiers, and wish to do all in our power to alleviate their sufferings."

Geo. H. Harlow, of Pekin, Ill., who, as he wrote, "had dedicated a portion of his garden to our brave soldiers," sent to the Fair eleven bushels of potatoes, being the crop raised therefrom.

J. W. Durfee, of Quincy, Ill., who had "planted two acres of potatoes for the soldiers," donated the entire crop to the Fair, reserving only the small ones for seed.

There was no end to the contributions of children, who cheerfully gave their pocket-money, the contents of their tiny "Savings' Banks," and the choicest of their treasures to the Soldiers' Fair. One little girl brought a beautiful wax doll, handsomely dressed, which had been carefully kept—a parting gift from her only brother, who was killed by guerrillas. With a wistful, lingering look, she laid it on the counter of the booth, and sighing, turned away. "Don't give your doll to the Fair, my child," said the lady in charge, who saw the sad look of the little one, "if it makes you feel badly." "Oh, no; that doesn't make me feel badly; but I can't help crying to think I shall never see my brother again." And the little child's frame shook with repressed sobs and tears, which now had vent.

A little girl in Mankato, Minn., sent $10—one for every year of her brief life. Two little sisters from West Chicago, gave $1.35, which they had saved and begged since they had first heard of the Fair.

Mrs. Lucinda Brewer, of Sterling, Ill., in her seventy-eighth year, gave eight very serviceable work-baskets, in which were twenty pin-cushions, all made by the venerable woman's own hands. Also twelve ironing-holders, made from a bed-quilt seventy-two years old.

Mrs. Mary Holbrook of the same town, in her seventy-ninth year, sent three pairs stockings and two pairs mittens, all knit by herself.

Miss Lucy Brown, of Norwich, Conn., in her seventy-eighth year, contributed a pair of socks knit by herself, the sixtieth pair knit by her aged hands for the soldiers, since the war began.

Mrs. Richards, of New York, a lady eighty years of age, sent a superb Afghan to the Fair, it is the unexcelled and almost inimitable work of her own hands, with other fancy articles. But we will not anticipate the lists of donations and donors. Whoever will examine these at the close of this pamphlet, will find it filled with explanatory notes, full of intensest interest.

A soldier of company H, 6th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry—Calender Ditter by name—sent a curious and not inelegant ladies' pin, a specimen of

"jack-knife jewelry," whose history was given in the note accompanying it, which we subjoin :

" This pin was made from relics gathered on the plains of N. W. Dacotah, while on the Indian expeditions of July and August, 1868. The pink centre was whittled from a muscle shell, found on the banks of the Red River of the North; the octagon from a buffalo horn, found near Devil's Lake; the white from a muscle shell found on the banks of the Cheyenne River; and the outer border of buffalo horn, found near the head waters of the James. The whole was cut with a jack-knife, the only tool (not military) which the soldier carries with him. Accept it as a gift, and make the most of it."

Should this meet the eye of the donor, it may gratify him to know that his "jewelry" sold for much more than its intrinsic worth, on account of its history.

Among the articles sent from Lake Superior, was a basket woven by a soldier boy with the aid of only one foot and hand, the other limbs having been lost in the battles of the country.

A poor contraband mother, from the same place, sent socks knit by herself for her own son, also a runaway slave, but who went to an early grave while serving in the army of freedom. Before the war, the poor woman had fled with her boy to the cold isolation of the upper lake, feeling safe with him in that remote locality. The war broke out, giving him a chance of doing something for the elevation of his down-trodden race, and though but a mere child, his course was taken. He enlisted; was ordered with his regiment to the very place of his birth, and in the very first engagement, he fell, a martyr to liberty.

Among the visitors to the Fair, were large numbers of military men, many officers of high rank, and not a few whose feats of bravery and brilliant daring have immortalized them. They were always the lions of the hour, and were the recipients of unnumbered courtesies from the ladies. On one morning, a tall, slender, fine-looking young gentlemen, modestly dressed in citizen's clothes, entered the Hall and quietly commenced making the tour of the booths, an evident look of delight on his face, and his many questions evincing more than ordinary interest. Soon, a soldier who had lost a leg, and walked with a crutch, and who was sitting in the Hall, sprang from his seat, and hobbled towards him, as fast as his enfeebled condition would allow, and forgetting the military salute in his great eagerness. Grasping him by the hand, with his face working with emotion, he said, "General, I was with you at Pea Ridge!" Up came another with emaciated face and figure, but with the same breathless gladness—"General, I fought under you at Prairie Grove!" Then another, "General, I was with you at Vicksburg!" and "I marched with you through Arkansas!" and "I have been with you ever since we started from Dubuque!"—till pretty soon, the almost stripling was surrounded by soldiers, all more or less hors du combat, and was shaking hands with them and congratulating them, and reciprocating their joy in the heartiest manner.

"Who is it?" "Can any one tell who that gentleman is?" was whispered around the Hall—"He is certainly a distinguished officer, who is here without shoulder straps." Soon, the Dubuque ladies caught a glimpse of him—and then there was another rush. The soldiers gave way for the ladies from Dubuque and Pittsburgh—some of them dear friends of his early life—and for a few minutes he seemed in greater danger from the encircling arms, and salutes not military, than when at Pea Ridge and Prairie Grove. It was MAJOR GENERAL FRANK HERRON, whose bravery, and loyalty, and nobleness have made him worthy of all honor and warm regard. Every effort was made to detain him during the remainder of the week—but he had received his orders, and too good a man to disobey them, he left the next morning for Texas.

A box of very interesting relics was sent from Rich Mountain, Va., through Mrs. Dr. Hoyt, of Madison, Wis., every article bearing a statement of the facts which gave it interest. They were collected for the Fair by the sister, niece and nephew of Stonewall Jackson,—Mrs. Arnold, and her son and daughter, Miss Grace and Master Starke Arnold, residing in Beverly, West Virginia. Mrs. Arnold is well known as a staunch Unionist, and her agency in collecting and forwarding the relics, gave additional value to them.

INTERESTING LETTERS.

A very lively interest was felt in the Fair by the soldiers in the South-western Hospitals, who, since they could do no more, sent innumerable messages and letters to the ladies engaged in it. There were three thousand in the hospitals at Memphis, Tenn., who sent their greetings to the ladies in the following letter, written at their request, and endorsed by them.

"MEMPHIS, TENN., Oct. 28th, 1863.

To the Managers of the Northwestern Fair :

LADIES :—The sick and wounded soldiers in the hospital at Memphis send you greeting, and through you wish to return thanks to the women of the Northwest—our mothers, wives, daughters and sisters—for their efforts to alleviate our wants and sufferings. We are deeply grateful for the sympathy manifested towards us both in words and deeds. We are cheered, comforted, and encouraged. Though absent, we are not to be forgotten, when returned to duty in the field, as we trust we soon may be. We shall be nerved once more to fight on, until this most unholy rebellion is crushed, and the old flag once more floats over a free, united and happy people. In the light of your smiles and this great earnest of your sympathy, we also have an additional incentive never to relax our efforts for a land whose women are its brightest ornaments, as well as its truest patriots. May your success be only measured by your love of home and country. In behalf of three thousand soldiers in the hospitals at Memphis.

[Signed,]

T. P. ROBB,
Illinois Sanitary Agent."

A similar letter was sent from the hospitals at Chattanooga, Tenn., but the bearer, after reading it aloud publicly in the several halls, quietly pocketed it, and no copy has been preserved. This letter was exceedingly gratifyng to the ladies, as it bore the signatures of thousands of our brave, wounded men, traced in every conceivable style of chirography—many of the autographs indicating the extreme feebleness of the writer. Many of the men signed it, and were eager to do so, who were standing “just on the boundaries of the spirit land,” and who must have passed over the dark river of death ere the bearer of the letter had reached Chicago.

From Quincy, Ill., where are four large hospitals, there also came a touching letter, which we append.

QUINCY, ILL., NOV., 1863.

The Soldiers' Club, representing the four hospitals in this city, and some seven hundred sick and wounded soldiers, desire to send an affectionate greeting to their kind friends in Chicago and elsewhere, who have interested themselves in their welfare, in connection with the Northwestern Fair. We have been deeply moved by the enthusiasm of the ladies of the land, in our behalf. We are quite certain that the wives, mothers, sisters, whom we have left behind at our many homes, have not forgotten us. It gives us courage to bear privation and pain; to suffer on, and, if need be, to offer up our lives on our country's altar. We believe the great interests at stake in this national struggle are worthy of all this sacrifice and suffering. Permit us once more to thank you for your noble effort, which has proved such a grand success—unprecedented in the history of Fairs.

We have in this city two Soldiers' Aid Societies—the Sisters of the Good Samaritan, and the Needle Pickets—which are unwearied in their labors of love.

Our humble organization for mutual improvement has been greatly aided by the co-operation of the ladies of the city, who have been present at our meetings, and assisted in the preparation of a semi-monthly paper. It would give us great pleasure to be in connection with the friends of soldiers elsewhere, and to receive articles which could be read at our meetings.

On behalf of the Soldiers' Club,

S. HOPKINS EMERY,

Hospital Chaplain.

No one will accuse us of disrespect, if we place after these letters from our noble men in the hospitals, suffering pain and sickness and weariness for the country's sake, two others selected from a number written to the lady managers, by the most illustrious men of the Northwest.

The first is from Hon. Schuyler Colfax, of South Bend, Indiana, and is in answer to the invitation of the ladies to dine with them on Nov. 5th, when the dinner was given to Governors, Senators and others.

SOUTH BEND, IND., NOV. 2, 1863.

DEAR LADIES :—Just returned home from a speaking tour in my native State of New York, I find your kind invitation to the dinner to be given next Thursday by the ladies of the Northwestern Fair, and sincerely regret that I cannot attend.

I trust that your enterprise, inspired as it must have been from above, will result in the brilliant and beneficent success it so richly deserves. The Good Samaritan's affectionate care of the stranger, maltreated and wounded by thieves, will live on the sacred page as long as the earth shall endure. And, if his humanity towards “an alien and stranger to the commonwealth of Israel,” elicited the approval of Him who spake as never man spake, and the injunction to “go thou and do likewise,” how much more should it teach us to care for the sick and wounded soldiers of the Republic? They suffer for us and our beloved land. They bleed and die that the nation may live. And, as the heroes, who by their patriotism and sacrifices, established this Union, will live in all loyal hearts to "the latest syllable of recorded time," so will also the heroes of to-day, who went forth from business, from family, and from home—some in the freshness of life's June, and some in the maturity of life's October—to save the Union their brave ancestors formed.

But, as I cannot be present in person, will you allow the enclosed $100 to attest the earnest sympathy of your sincere friend,

Mrs. A. H. Hoge,

Mrs. D. P. Livermore,

SCHUYLER COLFAX.

Committee, &c., &c.

No gentleman of Chicago manifested a more active interest in the Fair than Jas. H. Hoes, Esq., the well-known jeweler. His personal donations were princely, and he urged the ladies to call on him at any time for any aid he could furnish. More than this, in order to stimulate contributions, through the columns of the Chicago Tribune he offered a gold watch to the largest single contributor to the Fair. The donation of the manuscript Emancipation Proclamation by President Lincoln, which sold for $3,060, entitled him to the watch, which was very elegant and valuable. It was accordingly sent him, with the accompanying letter:

PRESIDENT LINCOLN:

CHICAGO, Nov. 26th, 1863.

SIR:—Among the many duties of our recent Fair, not one has been more pleasant than that now devolving upon us, of consigning to you the accompanying watch; and asking you to accept it as a memorial of the Ladies' Northwestern Fair. During the progress of the Fair, Mr. Jas. H. Hoes, jeweler, of Chicago, a most loyal and liberal man, after giving very largely himself, in order to stimulate donations from others, proposed, through the columns of the Chicago Tribune to give a gold watch to the largest contributor to the Fair. "Thou art the man." Your glorious Emancipation Proclamation, world-wide in its interests and results, was sold for $3,000, the largest benefaction of any individual.

The precious document has already become the corner-stone of a permanent Home for Illinois Soldiers: it will also be its cap-sheaf and glory. It will be built in a frame, in the wall of this noble institution, and stand a lasting monument of your wisdom, patriotism, liberality, and fatherly tenderness, for the brave boys, who, at your call, so promptly "rallied round the flag," and so gallantly defended it. That the God of peace may be with you, as the God of battles has prospered you, is the earnest prayer of your grateful friends and admirers,

MRS. A. H. HOGE,

MRS. D. P. LIVERMORE,

In behalf of Ladies' N. W. Fair.

The receipt of the watch was acknowledged by the President, as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Dec. 17, 1863.

LADIES:—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the watch sent by you to me, through the Honorable Mr. Arnold, and to return my sincere thanks for the kind and generous expressions by which it was accompanied.

I am, very truly, your obed't servant,

A. LINCOLN.

Mrs. Hoge.

Mrs. Livermore.

In closing this narration, a few words seem fitting, in reference to the parts borne in the Fair by the various States that contributed to make it a success. And first as to

ILLINOIS.

The donations from this State came almost entirely from Northern Illinois, as will be seen by the annexed list of contributions. The larger towns—Springfield, Ottawa, Aurora, Galena, Rockford, Freeport, Dixon, Galesburg, Elgin, Decatur, Quincy, &c., were truly munificent in their donations. Smaller towns contributed, perhaps, with proportionate liberality, and not an Aid Society, and scarcely a Loyal League in the whole Northern part of the State failed to represent itself in this grand effort for the soldiers. Not only contributions of money and goods were furnished by the Illinois auxiliaries of the Sanitary Commission, but many of the ladies connected with them gave personal help, and diligent labor during the two weeks of the Fair, renouncing home for the time, and coming to Chicago for that purpose. The Fair would have failed without these indefatigable workers from Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, as the ladies of Chicago, with their houses crowded with guests, and worn with their previous labors to forward the interests of the Fair, found their strength almost exhausted, in its very first week.

In the fine collection from Bloomington, was one unique article, as beautiful as rare. It was an "agricultural wreath," which seemed at a cursory glance, a magnificent framed bouquet of natural flowers; but a close inspection revealed it to be a cluster of flowers, made entirely of seeds and other natural products, the buds and blossoms so accurately copied from nature, in form and color, as to deceive any one who looked at it carelessly. It was in process of manufacture a year, and sold readily for $100. It displayed wonderful taste and ingenuity.

Of course the contributions from Chicago outnumbered those united from all other parts of the State. And yet they were not what the managers of the Fair had a right to expect from its wealth, its well-known liberality in giving, and the importance of the cause for which the Fair was held. Little was done in the way of obtaining contributions of money, except sufficient to defray contingent expenses. Heavy money contributions have been the main source of revenue to the other large fairs which have since followed in other cities. But in Chicago, goods, merchandise, fancy articles, refreshments, &c., were chiefly solicited, and it will be seen that the profits of the Chicago Fair have mainly accrued from the sales and admittance fees.

There is no doubt but a systematic canvassing of the business part of the city for money donations might have largely increased the net receipts of the Fair. But the lady managers—for this Fair, unlike any that have succeeded it, was entirely a Women's Fair—had no past experience in mammoth enterprises of the kind to guide them; they were treading terra incognita, and hesitated to make this draft on the business of the city. Their position was this: if the Fair proved a success, the community would endorse it, and exult in it; if it proved a failure, the community would wash their hands of it. Of course, there were lions in the way which those did not meet, after a grand hundred thousand dollar Sanitary Fair was un fait accompli.

Still there is no reason for shame when the contributions of Chicago are examined. They poured in continually after the Fair opened, and the list fills numerous pages in the catalogue. The generosity of Jas. H. Hoes, Esq., a prominent jeweler of Chicago, has already been mentioned. A magnificent $500 piano was given by Root & Cady, and Alanson Reed, Esq., whose piano establishment in Chicago is second to none in the United States, gave also a superb $600 instrument, and a Monitor Organ, worth some $125 more. Nor was this all. By personal efforts he secured the donation of a Chickering, and a Hale piano, and also one of the Treat and Linsley piano-case melodeons, worth $200—in all, between $2,000 and $3,000 worth of musical instruments, all of which were sold for their full value. His (Linsley) efforts did not cease with his donations. A first-class pianist was kept constantly in the Hall, who, while exhibiting the instruments, delighted the bystanders with most ravishing music, and he also added personal assistance in their sale.

Most generous assistance was also given by Potter Palmer, Esq., one of Chicago's princely dry goods merchants, who has given with open hand to all patriotic enterprises from the beginning of the war. Being in New York, on business, when tidings of the projected Fair reached him, he made a systematic effort among the jobbers, retailers and importers with whose houses Chicago has large business relations, and obtained from them over $5,000 in contributions of money, which he collected and forwarded to the Treasurer of the Fair. This, with other donations from his own purse, added to generous benefactions since, to other departments of the great sanitary work, have placed Mr. Palmer foremost in the ranks of the friends of the Sanitary Commission.

To P. W. Gates, Esq., the President of the Eagle Works Manufacturing Company, the Fair is indebted for the $1,000 boiler and steam-engine, whose operation in Manufacturers' Hall was such a source of gratification to visitors—as it was through his instrumentality that it was donated. In addition to the other gentlemen of Chicago whose names have been mentioned in this narrative, the managers of the Fair were indebted to Hon. I. N. Arnold and Hon. Lyman Trumbull, for advice, valuable suggestions, and continued personal aid. Mr. Arnold was the agent of valuable gifts from New York and Washington; while to the ladies of both these gentlemen the Fair was indebted for some of its most recherche treasures. To Hon. Mark Skinner, then President of the N. W. Sanitary Commission, who gave his time, advice and assistance during the Fair;—to E. W. Blatchford, Treasurer of the N. W. Sanitary Commission, who was also the indefatigable Treasurer of the Fair;—to Messrs. J. C. Fargo, E. C. Long and A. M. Lewis, whose labors as cashiers and ticket agents were unremitting;—to Messrs. Parker, Field and Bowman, the local editors of the Chicago Tribune, Journal and Post, respectively, who seconded the Fair from the beginning with wisdom and energy, and gave it important and valuable aid aside from that rendered in their journals;—to Alfred Smith, Esq., whose solicitations among personal friends in Philadelphia and New York brought to the Fair a large and valuable accession of donations from those cities;—to A. H. Hoge, Esq., who presided in Manufacturers' Hall, and aided in the sale of the articles there exhibited;—to the gentlemanly posse of Police who were stationed in the crowded halls, and assisted the machinery of the enterprise to run smoothly, without any show of authority, and without coming in collision with any of the various interests or parties represented;—to the corps of gentlemen who served in the Dining Hall as carvers, and performed numerous other necessary duties—to these, and many others whom we cannot name; the lady managers are under heavy obligations, which they remember gratefully.

WISCONSIN.

The contributions of Wisconsin, it will be seen, are nearly as heavy as those of Illinois. Ever since the organization of the Sanitary Commission, Wisconsin has co-operated with it as heartily as Illinois—indeed, in this work, Wisconsin, as well as Michigan, have almost ignored State limits.

For the noble part which Wisconsin performed in the Fair, the credit is largely due Mrs. J. S. Colt, of Milwaukee, and the "Wisconsin Soldiers' Aid Society," whose head-quarters are in that city. Never can the nobleness of these ladies be forgotten. Living in a city which is an acknowledged mercantile rival to Chicago, they rose above all considerations of jealousy, and toiled to swell the pecuniary results of the Fair, which were to be devoted to the alleviation of the sufferers in the military hospitals. The catalogue of donations shows how generous were the citizens of Milwaukee in their donations to the Fair. And here let it be said, that the Milwaukee boxes were among the most elegant received. Taste, costliness, beauty and exquisite workmanship characterized them all. This list of donations does not include the German donations, sent through Mrs. Gov. Salomon, of which we regret that no list has been furnished.

Handsome donations of money were made by the Milwaukee Board of Commerce, by private individuals, and a draft for $1,000 was sent through the "Milwaukee Aid Society," with the following note:

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 4, 1863.

Ladies of the Northwestern Fair:

Enclosed please find a draft on the "First National Bank of Milwaukee," for one thousand dollars, as a donation from the citizens of Milwaukee in aid of the objects of the Fair.

We, in common with the loyal citizens of the Northwest, wish the Fair great success, that our brave soldiers in the field and hospitals may know that while they are fighting for their country, and suffering for us, we do not forget them, but are mindful of their comfort and our duty towards them.

Yours with respect,

Mrs. JOHN NAZRO,

Treas. Milwaukee Aid Society.

Nor were the ladies of Madison, Wis., behind those of Milwaukee in efficient and generous action. To Mrs. B. F. Hopkins, Secretary of the "Soldiers' Aid Society" in that city, is mainly due the credit of their beautiful contributions. A valuable sugar mill was among the articles, bearing the wish of the donor that "it might aid in grinding out the rebellion!" Between $400 and $500 in money accompanied their donations, all of it solicited by the ladies of the Aid Society. Of this sum, the officers of the 30th Wis. Inf. gave $125. They also induced the inmates of the Insane Asylum located in their city to contribute a box of beautiful fancy articles, which were among the most attractive things on sale. Here, as in Milwaukee, the German ladies worked under Mrs. Gov. Salomon in a separate department, and were we to attempt a description of their contributions, we should be accused of using the language of exaggeration. Both the ladies of Madison and Milwaukee came to the Chicago Fair, and helped bear its burden of labor and responsibility, assisting in any department where they could be made useful.

To Mrs. Dr. Carr, of Madison, President of the Ladies' Loyal League, and to Mrs. Dr. Hoyt, of the same city, the Fair is under obligations for successful efforts in stimulating donations, by personal application and correspondence. The latter lady obtained many rare gifts from remote sources.

Janesville, Beloit and Racine also lent a generous hand in the work of the Fair, and beautified the Bazaar with elegant handiwork. A box of delicate articles from the Institution for the Blind located at Janesville, rivaled much that was wrought by those who are blessed with the gift of sight. From Racine, in connection with many other gifts, a "Threshing Machine," consisting of horse power; separator and truck wagon, worth $450, was donated by J. I. Case & Co., which sold, very early in the Fair, for its full value. From Green Bay, Berlin, Keshena and other towns, came Indian curiosities, the gifts of genuine aborigines, with unpronounceable names, while from Shullsburg were sent collections of minerals that almost turned the heads of mineralogists and geologists, that found their way to the carefully guarded cabinets.

But why anticipate the catalogue of donations? There Wisconsin has full credit for what she did for the Fair—and yet not wholly so, for how can be recorded the encouragement and enthusiasm, the kind suggestions, the hearty praise, the unflagging patience, and the heroic self-sacrifice which she brought to the work! These are all recorded in the hearts of her co-laborers, sweet savors in the casket of memory.

MICHIGAN.

When the Ladies' Convention met in Chicago, in the early part of September, to make preparations for the approaching Fair, Michigan, through her delegates, pledged herself to furnish all the fruit that was needed on that occasion, and all the evergreens to decorate the halls, ready made into wreaths, crosses, mottoes, &c. This pledge she amply fulfilled, and this, with the unequalled Exhibition of Tableaux given by the Detroit ladies, will render her connection with the Fair always memorable. Adrian, Ann Arbor, Kalamazoo, Jackson, Ypsilanti, Grand Haven, Pontiac, Marquette, Grand Rapids and Detroit, were handsomely represented. From Adrian, among quantities of other things, came a box of relics, collected by Rev. Geo. Duffield, at Gettysburg, within a week after the great battle, and a piece of cloth made from bark by natives of Africa.

From Jackson, a large box of most beautiful fancy work, and from the State Prison there located, a variety of articles, manufactured by the convicts expressly for the Fair—knives, hoes, hammers, hand-mirrors, boxes, brushes, &c. One poor fellow, a convict for life, sent a tree, two and a half feet high, carved from one piece of wood, and painted to imitate nature, which was sold the first day for thirty dollars. The interest manifested by the prisoners in the Soldiers' Fair, and their earnest desire to contribute to it, shows that they are not wholly dead to deeds of generosity and nobleness.

The donations from Kalamazoo were remarkably attractive. Those sent from the "Lunatic Asylum" in this city were so pretty and saleable, that they were sold almost as fast as they were unpacked. They were received at three o'clock P. M., and were all sold at five P. M.

Chiefly through the influence of Mrs. H. H. Greenough, of New York, who passed the summer at Marquette, a very deep interest was awakened in the Fair in that isolated region of country, and the contributions from Lake Superior, Sault St. Mary, and the copper and iron districts, were among the most profuse, the rarest and most valuable. Mrs. Greenough accompanied the donations, on her return route to New York. They were brought by the steamer Planet, which had a most stormy passage, and almost suffered shipwreck. The delay occasioned by the adverse weather retarded their arrival until the very last day of the Fair; but notification of their shipment had been sent some time before, and expectation was on tiptoe concerning them. Many of the gifts were sanctified by heart histories, and expressed the sympathy of patriotic souls, in most touching forms. The fancy work was speedily sold—so were many of the most attractive curiosities, and most showy minerals—the remainder were forwarded to Mrs. Greenough, for the New York Fair.

From Grand Rapids there were vases, paper weights, cups, &c., made from the beautiful gypsum of that locality, with a profusion of fancy articles in every style and variety: from Grand Haven, with a rich collection of very saleable goods, came handsome donations of money, T. W. Ferry, Esq., alone contributing $500.

Detroit not only gave in great abundance to the Fair, loaned pictures for the Art Gallery, and gave a grand and indescribably beautiful Exhibition of Tableaux for its benefit, but many of her prominent ladies came to Chicago, and lent diligent hands and cheerful hearts to advance its interests. Mrs. J. S. Palmer and Mrs. Elisha Eldred labored throughout in the Fair, and were exceedingly valuable auxiliaries, while Miss Valeria Campbell and Miss Sibley aided, not only by their presence in Chicago, but by their influence at home and in the State. To many other ladies of Michigan, whom we cannot mention, similar praise must be awarded; they worked for the Fair, and in it, and they have a large share in the honor of its success.

IOWA AND MINNESOTA.

If these States were more poorly represented than the other Northwestern States, it was not because of their lack of heart in the work, but because they are younger States than the others, more sparsely settled, and have not the same extensive railroad and steamboat facilities for transportation. But we doubt whether in proportion to their population and means they did less than the other States. Five-sixths of the territory of Iowa is in the hands of Eastern speculators, who refuse to open it to settlers—and the terrific Indian massacres of Minnesota have greatly reduced her population and means.

Cedar Rapids, Clinton, Davenport, Dubuque, Iowa City, Marion, and Vinton sent large cases of articles for the Fair. From Vinton there was sent an extensive and wonderful collection of bead work from the Institution for the Blind, which rivaled any workmanship of these patient, sightless toilers we have ever seen. It was intended to have it on exhibition for a few days, but the buyers—many of whom lived out of Chicago—were so clamorous for their purchases, that it was found impossible to retain them.

The Iowa City collection contained beautiful donations of Iowa marble in figures and specimens; very fine specimens of polished fossil coal for cabinets, and a Hebrew Bible found in the rebel camp near Vicksburg, by Rev. M. Cornwell of the 22d Iowa Infantry. The contributions of edibles for the dinner tables from Iowa City are worthy of mention. There were dozens of ducks, turkeys, prairie chickens and other wild game, eighty pieces of remarkably fine venison, with quantities of other appetizing dainties less rare. The gifts in this line were peculiarly acceptable, and the savor of them lingers in the memory.

The tiniest contribution came from Davenport. It was a micrograph of the Lord's Prayer, written with a pencil on a space less than one-sixteenth of a gold dollar, sent by W. O. Hiskey, principal of the High School. Quite a powerful microscope was necessary to read it.

Hon. Geo. B. Sargent, of Fonthill Farm, Durant, sent to the Fair a donation of two half-blood cashmere goats, whose winsome ways won the hearts of all children. A superb little phaeton and harness was made for them by Mr. Brown of the "Novelty Works," Chicago, and a house or barn by some other party. They were exhibited in Bryan Hall for several days, and whenever the crowds abated, so as to furnish room, they were harnessed and driven around the Hall, to the ecstatic delight of all the juvenilities assembled, who followed on after in stumbling eagerness, cheering, clapping hands, and shouting vociferously. Many a little fellow was routed from the nursery to see the "Goat Team" at the Fair, and was carried back crying in agony of spirit, because "papa" would not buy the whole establishment for him. The entreaties of one little youngster at last unlocked "papa's" purse, and the team, carriage and all were sold for $800.

If it be true that "the most direct route to the heart is through the stomach," then must Dubuque have "walked into the affections" of the patrons of the Dining Hall, by a very direct and speedy route. Her contributions to the dinners were amazing for their nicety, their profusion, and the great exertions made by the ladies to send them. We have narrated their exploits in this department of work, in our sketch of the Dining Hall. They will not soon be forgotten. Among their other donations was one that attracted much notice—a casket made from the native mineral of the Dubuque bluffs.

To Mrs. Conger, Miss Langworthy, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Clement, and other ladies of Dubuque connected with the Aid Society, Mrs. Dr. Ely of Cedar Rapids, Mrs. Dr. Lathrop of Cedar Falls, Mrs. C. W. Simmons of Clinton, and Mrs. Brainard of Iowa City, the Fair is mainly indebted for the contributions of Iowa.

St. Paul, Winona, Mankato, and some few smaller towns in Minnesota, remembered the Fair by donations of money or goods. The painful circumstances that have overshadowed this young State forbade the indulgence of large expectations of aid from it. "She did what she could."

• PITTSBURGH.

The interest taken in the Fair by Pittsburgh, Pa., was a genuine surprise. Some three or four weeks before the Fair opened, Mrs. A. H. Hoge, whose former home was in that city, went to Pittsburgh for a few days, and instinctively found her way to the rooms of the Pittsburgh Branch of the U. S. Sanitary Commission. She there met earnest workers in the great cause, who manifested so much interest in the Fair, that at the suggestion of Miss McFadden, President of the Ladies' Committee, a meeting was called to deliberate on the best way of aiding the movement. At the close of a most interesting interview, during which Mrs. Hoge unfolded the plans and purposes of the Fair, Mrs. Felix Brunot proposed that a society should be organized at once to work for the Fair, until its inauguration. This was immediately done, and Mrs. Brunot was chosen its President, and Miss Jacobus, Secretary.

How successfully this society worked, and how nobly the citizens of Pittsburgh responded to their appeals, the annexed list of donations will show. Her manufacturers, artisans and merchants sent choice specimens of their skill and taste, from the huge sheet of iron, worthy of Vulcan's forge, and the breech-loading steel cannon, gleaming in terrible beauty, to rich and rare fabrics of foreign looms, fit for the draping of a princess.

A booth, immediately opposite the main entrance, was fitted up for the reception of the exquisite fancy articles, bearing over it, in large evergreen letters, the sign, "THE IRON CITY." No booth in the Bazaar attracted as much attention. Its beautiful wares, superb cut glass, and gems of art, added to the interest excited by its captivating saleswomen, caused this part of the Hall to be thronged, and the booth to be a favorite place of resort. Large as was the assortment, the sales were so rapid, that but for immense boxes sent from the Methodist Female College of Pittsburgh, and from Brownsville, the "Iron City" department would have been sold out before the close of the Fair. Rev. Mr. Pushing, at the head of this Institution, became deeply interested in the every-where-talked-of Fair, and presented the subject to the young ladies under his charge, who contributed $188.15 in money, and a large box of fancy work of much greater value. Mrs. Sweitzer, of Brownsville, also went zealously to work, and succeeded in obtaining another box of large capacity, filled with exquisite goods for the Fair.

Not only did the Pittsburgh gifts add to the attractiveness of Bryan Hall, and tempt the appetite in the Dining Hall below, but they occupied no inconsiderable portion of Manufacturers' Hall. Carbon oil, with which we have only unsightly and unsavory associations, was sent from Pittsburgh in beautiful casks, with painted staves and gilded hoops, bearing mottoes redolent of undying loyalty. Kegs of nails, stoves, tubs, pails, and other articles of manufacture, were scattered throughout this department, on which the name of the "Iron City" was conspicuous. The gifts of Pittsburgh must have amounted in value to $5,000, if not more.

In addition to the bewildering assortment of articles contributed by our sister city, which filled two large freight cars, she sent a delegation of her best citizens to aid in the work—manly sons and womanly daughters—whose hearty co-operation can never be forgotten. All honor to the "Iron City"—the first "outside the ring" to extend to the Northwestern Fair the hand of greeting and liberality.

NEW YORK.

The metropolis of the Empire State for some time stood aloof, seeming scarcely to comprehend what the Northwest proposed to do. But when she realized her purpose, she uttered her "God-speed," not in words alone, but in deeds. Her Boards of Commerce sent their good wishes in the tangible shape of hundreds of dollars, an account of which will be found in the Treasurer's Report. A. T. Stewart, Esq., her merchant prince, donated a magnificent cashmere shawl which sold for $800, together with honiton laces, opera cloaks, &c. Goupil & Co., Tiffany, Appleton & Co., and others of her opulent tradesmen, sent tokens of remembrance to the Fair, which found ready purchasers. The united contributions of her importers, jobbers and retailers, sent by Potter Palmer, Esq., amounting to $5,850, and his untiring industry in presenting the cause, have already been alluded to in our notice of Illinois.

New York is now on the eve of a grand "Metropolitan Fair" for the Sanitary Commission. The Northwest tender to it hearty good wishes, and pray that it may make thousands where the Northwest made hundreds!

PHILADELPHIA.

The city of "Brotherly Love" also caught the contagion of liberality, and sent substantial tokens of approval and interest. Corporations certainly have souls now-a-days, for how else can it be accounted for that the Philadelphia Board of Commerce sent a handsome donation of money to the Northwestern Fair? Several elegant articles were also donated, among which the magnificent sword, belt and regalia, presented by W. W. Hortsman, Esq., attracted much notice. These gifts are especially worthy of mention, as the remoteness of Philadelphia might justly have excused her from any participation in the work of the Fair.

BOSTON.

The City of the Puritans was all astir with preparations for its own Sanitary Fair, which has since proved so magnificent a success. Yet with characteristic generosity she sent to the Northwestern Fair a box filled with treasures—so abundant with her—so rare in the Northwest. To James M. Barnard, Esq., is due the credit of the box, whose contents, incredible as it may seem to those who gave it, brought $500.

It contained among other things "too numerous to mention," a beautiful Chinese essence box, three large cases of medallions of various sizes and exquisite mould, a lace veil, hand-knit from the fibre of the cactus at Fayal, Azores Islands; a handsomely engraved ivory box, containing an engraved set of pearl counters; Sea Island Algæ, or Sea Island moss, as delicate as vapor, and arranged in sets; curious fans, slippers, pictures, table ware, &c., &c., in the highest style of Japanese and Chinese workmanship. A most spirited competition ensued on the arrival of the box, among various parties, who were desirous to obtain some of its rarest treasures, and as soon as they were priced, they vanished like dew before the sun!

CONNECTICUT.

The interest manifested by Connecticut in the Northwestern Fair, was equally a surprise and a gratification. In the midst of the Fair, at the close of its first week, arrived lavish contributions from that distant State, representing Thompson, Norwich and Hartford. The articles forwarded were beautiful, unique, and in some respects quite unlike anything sent from elsewhere. A party of Connecticut people, citizens of Norwich, also came on to attend the Fair, and reported themselves at the Sherman House, simultaneously with the arrival of the boxes.

Although representation by States was contrary to the plan agreed upon for the management of the Fair, it was at once decided to make an exception in favor of the far-off sister, who had so remembered the Northwest on this occasion, and to open a Connecticut department. Its management was assigned to Mrs. E. C. Henshaw, of Ottawa, Ill., who claimed Connecticut as her birth-place, and who had been chiefly instrumental in calling out this manifestation from her native State. Two booths were vacated and thrown into one, about which were raised placards bearing the names of "Connecticut;" natives of Connecticut were brought for saleswomen; Connecticut residents of Chicago were notified, by advertisement, of the enterprise in hand; the Connecticut ladies who had come on to attend the Fair assisted in unpacking the boxes, and the Connecticut Department went into operation.

The rush thither was immense. Articles sold so rapidly that in many cases they were bargained for when in transitu from box to booth, and were begged as a loan by the gratified saleswoman, for the sake of their rapidly emptying shelves. The Connecticut residents of Chicago sent various contributions: exotics, silver ware, worsted-work, boys' clothing, and, finally, genuine Wooden Nutmegs, manufactured expressly for this enterprise. The scene was a lively one. "Yankee talk" of the most approved dialect frequently went on, to the infinite amusement of the numbers of Connecticut people who flocked together here, as to a rendezvous, examining, purchasing, laughing, questioning and enjoying. In short, the Connecticut Department was, in every respect, a most gratifying feature of the Fair.

To the many beautiful and interesting articles sent from Connecticut, it would be impossible here to do justice. A few only may be separately mentioned. A splendid Valparaiso saddle, of blue velvet, embroidered in colors, was given by Miss Greene, of Norwich. It was deemed worthy a place in the Curiosity Shop, and sold for $100. The breakfast shawls sent from Norwich were of a new and elegant pattern, and excited great competition among purchasers. The articles from Hartford were so uniformly beautiful that it would seem invidious to particularize, though a fancy bead and worsted-work lamp-mat ought to be mentioned, as rivaling a similar piece of workmanship in the German Department, which had previously distanced competition. A very large and beautiful collection of sea-mosses and autumnal forest leaves, were prepared and sent by Mrs. T. E. Graves, of Thompson, many of the latter having been gathered at Putnam's Wolf Den, thus furnishing a much-sought memento of that revolutionary hero. Two groups of "Africans" excited great admiration and merriment—"Jeff. Davis' Contrabands," and "Massa Linkum's Freedmen." The slaves of the rebel president were represented as being sold at the auction-block; whereas "Massa Linkum's Freedman" was sitting in the midst of his own numerous family, evidently enjoying life, with infinite gusto and content. The ingenuity shown by Norwich ladies in the construction of these and similar curiosities, was remarkable and worthy the reputation of the State of "Yankee Notions." And let not omission be made of the pair of socks sent by an aged Connecticut woman—a patriot, in her seventy-fourth year—the sixtieth pair she had then knit for the soldiers. Sixty pairs since the war began! and her aged hands all distorted with rheumatism! Her name should be honored and handed down to posterity. It is Lucy BROWN.

In departing, the Connecticut visitants left behind them graceful mementos. These consisted of a photographic album filled with cartes de visite of Norwich soldiers, and a likeness of Hon. Wm. A. Buckingham, the chosen pilot of Connecticut through the present stormy period, and five times elected her Governor, which, it was requested, should be presented on the day of the Governors' Dinner, the first to Governor Salomon, of Wisconsin, and the second to Governor Yates, of Illinois, in the name of the Soldiers' Aid Society of Norwich, Conn. To these gifts, the ladies of the Conn. Department added another as an offering to Adj't-Gen. Fuller, of Ill., and the presentations were duly made. This interchange of friendly compliments between the loyal women of the East, and the equally loyal men of the West, will be long remembered with pleasure by the parties participating. The Connecticut Department realized, including some cash donations, over a thousand dollars.

The Eastern ladies chiefly instrumental in filling this department, were Mrs. S. S. Cowen, of Hartford; the wife of Gen'l D. Tyler, and Miss E. C. Greene, of Norwich; Mrs. T. E. Graves, of Thompson, and Mrs. W. R. Griffith, of New York.

Other States were represented in the Fair, as will be seen by the following list of donations. From several States came donations of land in other States, which are yet unsold, and at the disposal of the N. W. Sanitary Commission, who hold the deeds; and the employés of the Express Company in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Minnesota donated $800 in money to the Fair.

It has been impossible to go largely into details in this brief pamphlet history of the Fair; but we have intended, and think we have succeeded, in giving credit to its most prominent actors, and in describing whatever was most noteworthy. Any descriptive history of the Fair will seem tame and colorless, compared with the reality, to those who were partakers in it. Its pomp, and pathos, and enthusiasm, and patriotism can no more be transferred to paper than can the foam, and rainbows, and thunder of Niagara.

Other fairs have since followed, and more are yet to come, largely outdoing this in its pecuniary results, but in its morale none have yet equaled it. This was the first—an experiment entered upon doubtfully—and its success carried the community by storm, and bewildered and astonished even those who had set the machinery in motion. To the Women of the Prairies must ever be accorded the honor of leading in this work—of inaugurating this system of beneficent Fairs—and those which have followed have been mainly organized after their programme.

The net results of the Fair were beyond the expectations of those who inaugurated it. $25,000 was the shining mark aimed at, and over $78,000 have been paid into the Treasury of the N. W. Sanitary Commission, while it has in its possession between $2,000 and $3,000 worth of agricultural implements, real estate, &c., for which a market will be found early this spring. Between $40,000 and $50,000 of this money have already been spent for the "brave boys" of Chattanooga, Huntsville, Stevenson, Knoxville, and other Southern localities. The re-enlisting veterans, coming home in skeleton regiments, to fill up their broken ranks anew, who marched over the mountains of Eastern Tennessee with shoeless, bleeding feet, subsisting on three ears of corn a day, and then barely keeping alive for weeks afterwards on quarter rations, testify to the wisdom of this large expenditure. "As soon as the Commission teams could get through," they say, "they poured in the potatoes and crackers and green tea and other things, or else we fellows could never have got up again, we were so worn out with starvation and hard work." And this is true. The ability of the Northwestern Sanitary Commission to send large supplies to the veterans of Southern and Eastern Tennessee, whose privations and sufferings these last three months can never be told, has saved to the country hundreds of lives that would else have been lost. And so the ends of the Fair are being attained, and its hundreds and thousands of cheerful workers are being connected by invisible links, with the hosts of freedom who count "all things but loss and dross" for the sake of the country.

The accompanying lists of donations and donors were obtained by the indefatigable secretaries: Mrs. C. A. Lamb, Mrs. E. C. Long and Mrs. J. C. Fargo. To Mrs. Lamb is due the credit of their compilation in the present form. A vast deal of pains has been taken to have them accurate, and yet we have no doubt that many inaccuracies will be found among them. Although the secretaries' office was established beside the door of entrance, a great many donations were brought in and sold that were never entered. Small gifts of money from country Aid Societies were handed to the cashier with the sales of the day, without any notification of the source from whence they came; and articles were continually taken to the "Curiosity Shop," Manufacturers' Hall and the Dining Hall before they were entered at the Secretary's office.

The lists of the country Societies are published exactly as sent, some with the names of donors and some without. Every donation of which the secretaries or managers could possibly obtain information is here recorded, with the name of the town or individual sending it. Notice of any omissions or inaccuracies may be sent to Mrs. A. H. Hoge or Mrs. D. P. Livermore, when the correction will be made in the next report of the Commission.
